The amendment upon which I am now speaking merely seeks to strike out $25,000 of entertainment moneys from the provisions of this bill. There are provisoions calling for many more dollars for entertainment purposes. Of course, the amount that I seek to strike is not one-tenth of the funds that can be and will be used for entertainment purposes. Are our taxpayers supposed to pay for the entertainment of foreign people in the efforts of this Government to get those foreigners to take American assistance? Do you mean to say that we have got to entertain the foreign countries in order to get them into the necessary good humor to accept from us more than five and one-half billion dollars under the provisions of this bill? I would think that the foreign donees would be entertaining the American donors for these fabulous gifts that mean so little to the common people of Europe.

Oh, yes, I have something to say to a few of these good newspapermen here in the gallery who can find so little criticism for the European recovery program. Every time there is a water, flood-control, irrigation, electric-power, or navigation project proposed in this Congress to help the people of this Nation those same few newspapermen go about picking out Members of Congress in whose districts the projects are to be located and infer that those respective Members are crooks for wanting the public projects that could so benefit the entire Nation. I presume that such writers had rather the money would be lavishly thrown overseas than allowed to benefit the American people. Such newspaper tactics are just a mode of cheap political pressure in an effort to browbeat the membership of this House. I might say further that none other than a person with criminal inclinations who could not be trusted any farther than you could throw a bull by the tail would infer crookedness at the hands of another without proof thereof. Big business sells a lot of the commodities for ECA purposes. I am wondering if such newspapers are attempting to help big business sell ECA commodities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. TACKETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. TACKETT. The other day I was listening to a radio broadcast from Sicily. The commentator was standing on the sidewalk asking the various passers-by what they thought about the Marshall plan. Only 2 out of 40 questioned knew what he was talking about. These two were man and wife. The husband said that he was a Communist; for Russia; and could do without the American Marshall plan assistance. The wife said that she was for the Marshall plan; appreciated the American assistance; and wanted to thank the good people of the United States. The husband countered that his wife was all wrong—that even though they were receiving assistance from America that the Russians would eventually have to take care of them; and that the Russian form of government was more dependable.

The common people of Europe do not know one single, solitary thing about the Marshall plan and they care nothing about it. They have no reason to know from whence the assistance is coming; actually very little direct assistance is made to the people through ECA. We slough off the money to the European governments in power and they either sell the property to the people or take direct credit for any hand-outs. We are just being a bunch of suckers, and we all know it.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 2 minutes, the 2 minutes to be reserved to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman states very frankly that he is opposed to the ECA. He has found out that he cannot defeat the program on the floor of this House because Congress is committed to it. So he tries to accomplish by indirection what he knows cannot be accomplished directly. Certainly, there is no businessman on the floor of this House or anywhere else who does not know that in negotiations of the kind that the ECA must conduct there are times when people must get together at lunches, dinners, and other functions. We are spending in Europe approximately $5,000,000,000 a year. In this bill there is $25,000 for entertainment for the entire ECA program. I do not believe that anybody on the floor of the House will think that is an exorbitant expenditure.

I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TACKETT].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistance to Greece and Turkey

For an additional amount for "Assistance to Greece and Turkey," as authorized by the act of May 22, 1947 (61 Stat. 103), as amended and supplemented, to be available immediately, $50,000,000, which, together with the amounts heretofore appropriated under this head, shall remain available until June 30, 1950; and the existing limitation under this head in the Foreign Aid Appropriation Act, 1949, on the amount available for administrative expenses, shall continue in effect; and the existing limitation under said head on the amount available for such expenses in the District of Columbia is increased from "$460,000" to "$425,000": Provided, That said limitations shall apply only to the administrative expenses of the Department of State.

S. C. 99), or of section 19 (e) of the Contract Settlement Act of 1944, or of any other Federal law imposing restrictions, requirements, or penalties in relation to the employment of persons, the performance of service, or the payment or receipt of compensation in connection with any claim, proceeding, or matter involving the United States: Provided further, That funds appropriated hereunder may be used, insofar as practicable, and under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the head of the department or agency concerned, to pay ocean transportation charges from United States ports, including territories' ports, to ports in Japan and the Ryukyus for the movement of supplies donated to, or purchased by, United States voluntary nonprofit relief agencies registered with and recommended by the Advisory Committee on Voluntary Foreign Aid or of relief packages consigned to individuals residing in such countries: Provided further, That under the rules and regulations to be prescribed, the head of the department or agency concerned shall fix and pay a uniform rate per pound for the ocean transportation of all relief packages of food or other general classification of commodities shipped to Japan or the Ryukyus regardless of methods of shipment and higher rates charged by particular agencies of transportation, but this proviso shall not apply to shipments made by individuals to individuals: Provided further, That the President may transfer to any other department or agency any function or functions provided for under this appropriation, and there shall be transferred to any such department or agency such unobligated balances of this appropriation and, without reimbursement and without regard to the appropriation from which procured, such property as the Director of the Bureau of the Budget shall determine to relate primarily to any function or functions so transferred; and any funds so transferred may be expended either under the authority contained herein or under the authority governing the activities of the department or agency concerned.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARY: On page 6, line 16, strike out "$850,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$925,000,000"; and in the same line strike out "$29,750,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$45,000,000."

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment merely restores $75,000,000, or one-half the amount the committee cut from GARIOA, which is Government and Relief In Occupied Areas, meaning Germany, Japan, and the Ryukyus, and EROA, which is the ecomonic rehabilitation program in the occupied areas of Japan and the Ryukyus.

They spent last year in this fund $1,300,000,000. The budget this year requested $1,000,000,000. The subcommittee recommended $950,000,000. It cut off $50,000,000. The full committee cut off $150,000,000. This amendment restores $75,000,000, making the appropriation for this item $925,000,000. In addition, there was a reduction in the administrative expenses, which is not an additional appropriation but which comes out of the $925,000,000.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. The original estimate was $50,000,000 for expenses.

Mr. GARY. The original estimate for expenses was $50,000,000. This amendment would cut it to $45,000,000.

As I stated in my opening statement, the question of ECA is one of choice for this country. GARIOA is a legal obligation. This is an obligation we have assumed, one that we must meet, and I feel that this is the smallest amount with which it can be met during the next year.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. As I understand the amendment, the gentleman is increasing the amount available for administrative expenses from $29,750,000 to $45,000,000?

Mr. GARY. Increasing the amount recommended by the committee. The amount requested in the Budget was $50,000,000. The subcommittee recommended that it be reduced to $45,200,000. We are going now to $45,000,000 even. We are cutting $200,000 below the recommendation of the subcommittee.

Mr. RICH. We do not care anything about what somebody else did, we are interested in what we are doing to this bill.

The gentleman is increasing it $15,250,000, is that right?

Mr. GARY. Yes.

Mr. RICH. That is for the expenses of administration?

Mr. GARY. Yes.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman from Arkansas a while ago was talking about spending a lot of this money and the propaganda that was going on.

Mr. GARY. The gentleman from Pennsylvania I am sure will be delighted to know that we are changing that administration from a military administration to a civilian administration. General Clay is to be succeeded as governor in Germany by Mr. McCloy, who is to be the high commissioner. I know the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not want to endanger the success of this new civilian administration. Let us go on with this now and then maybe we can cut it next year.

Mr. RICH. The trouble is that whether it is civilian or whether it is military it costs too much money.

Mr. GARY. Do not let us embarrass them. Do not let us take any chances.

Mr. RICH. Then let us leave it at $29,000,000.

Mr. GARY. That would embarrass them tremendously.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARY. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. Is it not significant that we provide $16,500,000 for the administration of $3,500,000,000 under ECA, but $45,000,000, or three times as much, for the administration of less than a billion under GARIOA?

Mr. GARY. This takes care of the administration not only of GARIOA, but of the entire United States administration in Germany, Japan, and the Ryukyus.

Mr. JUDD. My point is this. Part of the reason why Paul Hoffman and the ECA administration can handle four times as much for a third as much administrative expense is because of the counterpart funds, is it not, which somebody was criticizing a little while ago? Local expenses of administration in England and France can be handled in their own currency, whereas in the GARIOA countries, we have to furnish dollars for such expenses.

Mr. GARY. In addition, in the other countries, we are trying to get them to promote their own recovery programs and they are paying a part of the expenses, whereas in Germany we are in command and we have to administer the whole program.

Mr. JUDD. You understand, I am sure, that I do not object to the higher figure for GARIOA. I think it is necessary. I merely want to pay tribute to the wisdom of the counterpart funds system which enables ECA to administer its enormous program, for an exceeding small percentage, less than one-half of 1 percent as against about 5 percent for GARIOA.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. TACKETT. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, now we are going to have 15 minutes to raise this $15,250,000—that is $1,000,000 a minute. If there is anybody who is going a-whooping, we are, but we do not know where we are going. I agree with the gentleman from Arkansas. I want to tell you that if there is anybody I want to help, if there are any people I would like to try to accommodate, it is anyone who is starving. I would go the limit on that, but this is not a starving bill—only for the Americans. The Americans are the only ones who are going to starve on this legislation, because we are not going to be able to raise that million dollars a minute that we are spending here as we talk about it. The trouble with us is every time we do anything it costs us about 10 times more than it ought to cost to administer it. The trouble with this legislation is that we are bringing a lot of people here in this country from these foreign countries to tell us just how good we are for giving them this money.

As the gentleman from Arkansas said awhile ago, if you knew about what the money was spent for, that we are giving to those fellows, to get us to believe that we are doing a good thing, we just would not do it. That is the sad part about this legislation. For the last 5 or 6 years we have been trying to keep, as he said, a socialistic government going in Great Britain. I would not give a nickel to keep a Socialist government going in America. I am against it in every way. Yet you will spend a billion dollars to keep Britain going and let Great Britain reduce her taxes over there so that you can tax our people more money to help the British Socialist Government remain in power. I think it is a travesty on American intelligence that the Members of Congress should vote for anything like that. Brother from Arkansas, stand up. Let us stand up here and fight until the cows come home and try to stop this thing. It is about time that we tried to get more Members here to fight this kind of legislation. I know you have to have good administration, but our administration here in America is just costing the taxpayers of America too much. You have got too much red tape. You have too much organization. You have too many people on the pay roll. You have too many people who want jobs. You have too many commissions that you want to send over to Europe and other parts of the world to review foreign affairs and the things that are going on in those countries. You are asking too many of those people to come over here and run around to tell the Americans what good fellows we are for being such saps to give them so much money. It is about time we stopped.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. ROONEY. Does the gentleman feel that it is more important to spend millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money for an historical site in Philadelphia, for which the gentleman from Pennsylvania recently voted, or to spend some money to stem the tide of communism in Europe?

Mr. RICH. Oh, my soul. You are so far behind the times that you ought to wake up. Your forefathers were the fellows who gave you your independence. Your forefathers were the ones who wrote this Constitution. They are the ones who gave us this free government and you are only trying to wreck it. You ought to be ashamed of yourself.

Mr. ROONEY. I will not quarrel with or answer my friend. He is really a fine gentleman. It is too bad he cannot answer my question.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I fully realize that this proposition is all cut and dried. Everybody is ready to vote, and what I say is not going to change anybody's mind, but I am impelled to join my friend from Pennsylvania on this issue, much as I disagreed with him the other day, and oppose this amendment.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I think attention should be called to the fact that GARIOA is not merely a relief program but it is a governmental administrative program which embraces the administration of a government of occupation, and that necessarily calls for much greater administration than a relief program which is worked out with the country involved. There is also involved here an educational program, and administration of the educational program has to come out of this fund. So there are sound reasons for the administrative costs of GARIOA greatly exceeding on a percentage basis those of ECA itself. This particular item deals with government and relief in occupied countries.

Mr. CRAWFORD. One thing I wish to get straightened out in my own mind is the amount recommended in this military government item: Is the gentleman from New York going to stand by the committee recommendation or by the amendment?

Mr. TABER. The committee recommended $850,000,000 in one place, and $29,750,000 in another on this particular item. That, of course, was the action of the committee. The amendment has been offered here. As a matter of fact, this particular set-up with the obligation that is on this country to take care of relief in occupied territory is an entirely different subject than the ECA, and we have got to meet our responsibility there. The figure for relief in Germany has been cut already below the authorization of the $80,000,000 since the authorization bill was passed in conection with the ECA appropriation.

this House or anywhere else who does not know that in negotiations of the kind that the ECA must conduct there are times when people must get together at lunches, dinners, and other functions. We are spending in Europe approximately $5,000,000,000 a year. In this bill there is $25,000 for entertainment for the entire ECA program. I do not believe that anybody on the floor of the House will think that is an exorbitant expenditure.

I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TACKETT].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistance to Greece and Turkey

For an additional amount for "Assistance to Greece and Turkey," as authorized by the act of May 22, 1947 (61 Stat. 103), as amended and supplemented, to be available immediately, $50,000,000, which, together with the amounts heretofore appropriated under this head, shall remain available until June 30, 1950; and the existing limitation under this head in the Foreign Aid Appropriation Act, 1949, on the amount available for administrative expenses, shall continue in effect; and the existing limitation under said head on the amount available for such expenses in the District of Columbia is increased from "$460,000" to "$425,000": Provided, That said limitations shall apply only to the administrative expenses of the Department of State.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARY: On page 6, line 16, strike out "$850,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$925,000,000"; and in the same line strike out "$29,750,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$45,000,000."

Mr. GARY. In addition, there was a reduction in the administrative expenses, which is not an additional appropriation but which comes out of the $925,000,000.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. The original estimate was $50,000,000 for expenses.

Mr. GARY. The original estimate for expenses was $50,000,000. This amendment would cut it to $45,000,000.

Mr. RICH. As I understand the amendment, the gentleman is increasing the amount available for administrative expenses from $29,750,000 to $45,000,000?

Mr. GARY. Increasing the amount recommended by the committee. The amount requested in the Budget was $50,000,000. The subcommittee recommended that it be reduced to $45,200,000. We are going now to $45,000,000 even. We are cutting $200,000 below the recommendation of the subcommittee.

Mr. GARY. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. Is it not significant that we provide $16,500,000 for the administration of $3,500,000,000 under ECA, but $45,000,000, or three times as much, for the administration of less than a billion under GARIOA?

Mr. GARY. This takes care of the administration not only of GARIOA, but of the entire United States administration in Germany, Japan, and the Ryukyus.

Mr. JUDD. My point is this. Part of the reason why Paul Hoffman and the ECA administration can handle four times as much for a third as much administrative expense is because of the counterpart funds, is it not, which somebody was criticizing a little while ago? Local expenses of administration in England and France can be handled in their own currency, whereas in the GARIOA countries, we have to furnish dollars for such expenses.

Mr. GARY. In addition, in the other countries, we are trying to get them to promote their own recovery programs and they are paying a part of the expenses, whereas in Germany we are in command and we have to administer the whole program.

Mr. JUDD. You understand, I am sure, that I do not object to the higher figure for GARIOA. I think it is necessary. I merely want to pay tribute to the wisdom of the counterpart funds system which enables ECA to administer its enormous program, for an exceeding small percentage, less than one-half of 1 percent as against about 5 percent for GARIOA.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. TACKETT. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, now we are going to have 15 minutes to raise this $15,250,000—that is $1,000,000 a minute. If there is anybody who is going a-whooping, we are, but we do not know where we are going. I agree with the gentleman from Arkansas. I want to tell you that if there is anybody I want to help, if there are any people I would like to try to accommodate, it is anyone who is starving. I would go the limit on that, but this is not a starving bill—only for the Americans. The Americans are the only ones who are going to starve on this legislation, because we are not going to be able to raise that million dollars a minute that we are spending here as we talk about it. The trouble with us is every time we do anything it costs us about 10 times more than it ought to cost to administer it. The trouble with this legislation is that we are bringing a lot of people here in this country from these foreign countries to tell us just how good we are for giving them this money.

As the gentleman from Arkansas said awhile ago, if you knew about what the money was spent for, that we are giving to these fellows, to get us to believe that we are doing a good thing, we just would not do it. That is the sad part about this legislation. For the last 5 or 6 years we have been trying to keep, as he said, a socialistic government going in Great Britain. I would not give a nickel to keep a Socialist government going in America. I am against it in every way. Yet you will spend a billion dollars to keep Britain going and let Great Britain reduce her taxes over there so that you can tax our people more money to help the British Socialist Government remain in power. I think it is a travesty on American intelligence that the Members of Congress should vote for anything like that. Brother from Arkansas, stand up. Let us stand up here and fight until the cows come home and try to stop this thing. It is about time that we tried to get more Members here to fight this kind of legislation. I know you have to have good administration, but our administration here in America is just costing the taxpayers of America too much. You have got too much red tape. You have too much organization. You have too many people on the pay roll. You have too many people who want jobs. You have too many commissions that you want to send over to Europe and other parts of the world to review foreign affairs and the things that are going on in those countries. You are asking too many of those people to come over here and run around to tell the Americans what good fellows we are for being such saps to give them so much money. It is about time we stopped.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. ROONEY. Does the gentleman feel that it is more important to spend millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money for an historical site in Philadelphia, for which the gentleman from Pennsylvania recently voted, or to spend some money to stem the tide of communism in Europe?

Mr. RICH. Oh, my soul. You are so far behind the times that you ought to wake up. Your forefathers were the fellows who gave you your independence. Your forefathers were the ones who wrote this Constitution. They are the ones who gave us this free government and you are only trying to wreck it. You ought to be ashamed of yourself.

Mr. ROONEY. I will not quarrel with or answer my friend. He is really a fine gentleman. It is too bad he cannot answer my question.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I fully realize that this proposition is all cut and dried. Everybody is ready to vote, and what I say is not going to change anybody's mind, but I am impelled to join my friend from Pennsylvania on this issue, much as I disagreed with him the other day, and oppose this amendment.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I think attention should be called to the fact that GARIOA is not merely a relief program but it is a governmental administrative program which embraces the administration of a government of occupation, and that necessarily calls for much greater administration than a relief program which is worked out with the country involved. There is also involved here an educational program, and administration of the educational program has to come out of this fund. So there are sound reasons for the administrative costs of GARIOA greatly exceeding on a percentage basis those of ECA itself. This particular item deals with government and relief in occupied countries.

Mr. CRAWFORD. One thing I wish to get straightened out in my own mind is the amount recommended in this military government item: Is the gentleman from New York going to stand by the committee recommendation or by the amendment?

Mr. TABER. The committee recommended $850,000,000 in one place, and $29,750,000 in another on this particular item. That, of course, was the action of the committee. The amendment has been offered here. As a matter of fact, this particular set-up with the obligation that is on this country to take care of relief in occupied territory is an entirely different subject than the ECA, and we have got to meet our responsibility there. The figure for relief in Germany has been cut already below the authorization of the $80,000,000 since the authorization bill was passed in conection with the ECA appropriation.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask this question: Does the Committee on Appropriations recommend on page 6, line 16, $850,000,000 or $925,000,000?

Mr. TABER. The committee voted to recommend $850,000,000; and they further voted to recommend $29,750,000 for the other figure.

Mr. CRAWFORD. So far as the gentleman from New York knows, is the committee standing by this $850,000,000 or does the committee now stand for the $975,000,000?

Mr. TABER. The chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill has offered this amendment. It is in the nature of a compromise; and, frankly, I shall not oppose it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I thank the gentleman for his remarks. I feel this is an awfully loose manner in which to handle the funds provided by the taxpayers of this country; and here is one of the basic reasons why I will not support this bill. I expect to vote against the bill, because I think this whole program is in a runaway frame of mind; I do not think the Congress has ever had control of this program; I do not think it has ever been administered in a reasonable, efficient manner; and I think we are disrespectful of the taxpayers of the United States in so loosely handing out funds for these international projects.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TACKETT].

Mr. TACKETT. Mr. Chairman, I have not made a habit of using much of the time of this House in debate on bills, and my record to date will certainly not label me as a reactionary. But, gentlemen, I can not understand how this committee can have the guts, gall, and audacity to ask for an additional $15,000,000 to administer the giving away of funds in Japan and Germany. The bill calls for $30,000,000, and you are asking this House for a total of $45,000,000 to supervise the spending of billions of dollars for direct relief to the people of these defeated countries, who waged war against us. Of course, the Civil War is over, and perhaps shouldn't be mentioned, but it is hard for me to ignore the fact that you did not give us in the South $45,000,000 to supervise the spending of billions for the people of the South at the expiration of the Civil War. We were conquered and treated as conquered people. All you gave us were carpetbag judges and allowed us to starve.

Just last night, as quoted in this morning's newspaper, the President of the United States said in a speech that this country had made history by assisting defeated foreign enemies taken over by us, and at the same time allowing our people to do without the necessities of life.

This compromise that has been entered into by and between the Democratic and Republican leadership is quite amusing. Let projects be offered by either administration for the benefit of this Nation, and there is never a compromise, but a bitter fight to the last ditch in an effort to preclude our people from receiving helpful assistance that we may send it overseas to ungrateful, socialistic countries.

Mr. GARY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TACKETT. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. GARY. I am wondering if the gentleman thinks that Virginia is north of the Mason and Dixon's line?

Mr. TACKETT. I know where the gentleman is from. I know all about that, but what I am talking about is how foolish the gentleman is acting today. One would not know that the gentleman was from Virginia by the way he is willing to throw the taxpayers' money around. I shall support no part of any such legislation.

Mr. GARY. I am proud of the fact that I am from Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GARY].

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, may I demand a division, or a separate vote on the change of the figure of $850,000,000 and in the change of the figure of $29,750,000?

The CHAIRMAN. That would be subject to demand for a division.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order that, the vote having been taken, it is too late for the gentleman to request a division of the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote had not been determined. We were about to take the vote. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING] request a division?

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I demand a division of the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote is on the first portion of the amendment which authorizes an increase from $850,000,000 to $925,000,000.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TACKETT) there were—ayes 120, noes 39.

So the first part of the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the second portion of the amendment, which provides for an increase in funds from $25,750,000 to $45,000,000.

The second part of the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE II—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 201. No part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used to pay the salary or wages of any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit has not contrary to the provisions of this section engaged in a strike against the Government of the United States, is not a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or that such person does not advocate, and is not a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided further, That any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment the salary or wages for which are paid from any appropriation contained in this act shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both: Provided further, That the above penalty clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law.

SEC. 202. This act may be cited as the "Foreign Aid Appropriation Act, 1950."

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COOLEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4830) making appropriations for foreign aid for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. RICH. Indeed I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RICH moves that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the "noes" had it.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BURDICK, Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota, and Mr. MARCANTONIO demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and forty-four Members are present; a quorum.

The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARCANTONIO) there were—ayes 193, noes 27.

So the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

PROGRAM FOR NEXT WEEK

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, in order that I may inquire of the majority leader the program for the coming week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, we will meet tomorrow and then adjourn until Tuesday.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I understand there will be no controversial business tomorrow.

Mr. McCORMACK. There will be no business tomorrow.

In just a moment I expect to ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

As to the program for next week, there will be nothing on Monday because the House will not be in session.

On Tuesday we will take up House Resolution 215, providing for investigations to be made by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. That will take not more than an hour. Following that will come the bill H. R. 834, to amend the Contract Settlement Act of 1944.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman explain what that bill does?

Mr. McCORMACK. This bill came from the Committee on the Judiciary. The purpose of the bill is to compensate persons who without fault or negligence suffered loss in attempting to supply certain strategic or critical minerals or metals for the war effort.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That has a unanimous committee report?

Mr. McCORMACK. I understand it has a unanimous report.

I might say that on Tuesday, if it appears that a roll call is to be had on action on any measure, if it is agreeable with the gentleman from Massachusetts I shall ask unanimous consent that such roll call be taken on Wednesday.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is agreeable to me.

Mr. McCORMACK. On Wednesday the bill relating to veterans' pensions will come up for consideration.

On Thursday and Friday there will be the bill H. R. 4569, the displaced-persons bill.

Any further program for the remainder of next week will be announced later. Conference reports, of course, may be brought up at any time, but not on Tuesday, for on that day nothing will be taken up of a controversial nature. I make this announcement with reference to Tuesday so that Members may govern themselves accordingly.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order on Calendar Wednesday of next week be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. McDaniel, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3704) entitled "An act to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia."

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 900) entitled "An act to amend the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate further disagrees to the amendment of the House to the above-entitled bill and asks a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. AIKEN, and Mr. YOUNG to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CVA

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, Americans seem to have about two ways of trying to accomplish things in a governmental way. One is embodied in the well-worn slogan, "There ought to be a law." The other reached perhaps its highest point during the depression when the piling of executive agency upon agency created only slightly less confusion than the agencies themselves were expected to resolve.

It seems to me that we are too prone to do these things: First, to expect the mechanics of government to take over when our own moral accomplishments lag behind our responsibilities; and, second, to forget that where Government pays or subsidizes, it will also control.

Two wise men speak from the past words directly applicable to the subject under consideration. It was Jefferson who said, "That government is best which governs least." There is a compact statement which, considered one way, throws the responsibility for good government upon the shoulders of the people, because, stated otherwise, Jefferson might have said, "Governmental controls should not be instituted except under clear and inescapable necessity."

Lincoln wrote:

> In all that the people can individually do as well for themselves, government ought not to interfere.

I conceive that neither of these great men could have contemplated the imposition of such a super state as is envisioned in the Columbia Basin Administration with any high degree of equanimity. There were democrats—with a small "d"—men who still cherished and strove to preserve the freedom and dignity of individual men, and who knew the full meaning of political responsibility at the grass roots in building a powerful democratic force in a great and developing country.

Incidentally, it is interesting to note that, in the several bills already introduced for the creation of a CVA, the "A" is for "Administration," not for "Authority" as in TVA. This is a delightfully naive sugar coating to conceal the bitter content of the pill it is now proposed to administer to the free people of the Pacific Northwest. They might swallow the beautiful connotations of "Administration," ah, yes. That brings visions of efficiency and brilliant executives, smooth-running governmental machinery, and the elimination of those old bogeys of Government "waste, overlapping, and duplication." "Authority," though, brings up visions of the rod that chastises, policy power, controls, regulations. It is a bad word. But careful study of the bills themselves discloses little of the softening implied by the shift in title. The velvet glove still covers a hand of steel and the authority resides in the bills to take over and run the natural resources of the Northwest.

The powers and responsibilities of the Administration as defined in section 2 (a) of S. 1645—MAGNUSON et al.—say:

> It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States that the relevant powers and activities of the Federal Government in the Columbia Valley region shall be so organized, directed, and administered as to assist to the greatest possible extent in achieving the full and unified conservation, development, and use of the water, land, forest, mineral, fish and wildlife, and other natural resources of the region, for the purpose of fostering and protecting commerce among the several States, strengthening the national defense, developing the lands, and preserving the property of the United States, and promoting the general welfare.

I find little excluded. It includes all the things on the earth and beneath the surface thereof, the things that swim in the waters and fly in the air, and by inference, the things that crawl upon the surface of the earth. Presumably these latter might still be permitted to cast a ballot.

Now in section 5, we find the heading "State and local participation." Sounds nice, but listen to the language:

The Administration shall seek the advice, assistance, and participation of the people of the region and their State and local governments and organization, public and private, to the fullest practicable extent, in the formulation and execution of programs designed to carry out the purposes of this act.

The rest of the section tells about advisory boards and councils who may submit reports and opinions, but I am unable to find any language that requires the directors of the Administration to do any more than receive and register opinions of such advisory boards and councils.

Some read into these bills limited powers, but let me quote section 6 (b):

Subject to the policies, conditions, and limitations stated in this act, the Administration is authorized and directed to construct, operate, and maintain projects (including stand-by facilities), and to carry out activities, necessary for the promotion of navigation (except for channel and harbor improvement work in tidal waters tributary to the Pacific Ocean); for the control and prevention of floods; for the conservation and reclamation of lands and land resources; for the development and conservation of forest, mineral, and fish and wildlife resources; for the generation, transmission, and disposition of electric energy; for the execution of such other responsibilities as are vested in the administration by or pursuant to this act; and, in connection with any of the foregoing, for the development and conservation of recreational resources and for the promotion of sanitation and pollution control: Provided, That in the location, design, and construction of any dam or other facility, or any series of dams or facilities, the administration shall endeavor to foster, protect, and facilitate the access of all anadromous fish to and from their spawning areas throughout the region.

That is indeed an interesting section. While no specific mention is made of retail trade, one may assume that if it became necessary to run grocery stores it would be done under the general-welfare clause. Note carefully the "provided", which is lip service to the fishermen and completely without significance. The best authorities are agreed that another high dam on the Columbia means the end of commercial salmon fishing. I am certain that power and irrigation dams on the Rogue and the Umpqua will ruin those incomparable streams for the sport fishing that now constitutes one of the most important resources of Oregon. But note—not one word that says the people of the Umpqua or Rogue or Columbia can do any more than register an opinion. The CVA is constrained only to endeavor to foster, whatever that means, and facilitate the access, and so forth. I submit that these are weasel words. CVA could and would do as it pleased regardless of the fish.

Section 6 (c) is a beauty:

To the extent found necessary or appropriate in carrying out the foregoing subsection, or other provisions of law, but subject to the conditions and limitations herein stated, the Administration is authorized and shall have the power (1) to acquire real and personal property, including any interest therein, by purchase, lease, condemnation, exchange, transfer, donation, or otherwise, and to sell, lease, exchange or otherwise dispose thereof, including donations incident to experimentation, demonstrations, or other similar uses (without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended); and to obtain services by contract, donation, or otherwise: Provided, however, That the Administration shall have no power to condemn any water right except as it may be appurtenant to land acquired incident to the construction of dams, reservoirs, or other projects or facilities.

Here is eminent domain with a vengeance.

Notice also 6 (c) (3):

To conduct economic, scientific, and technologic investigations and studies, to establish, maintain, and operate research facilities, and to undertake experiments and practical demonstrations.

Note especially the phrase "and practical demonstrations." Does anybody know where demonstration leaves off and Government ownership and operation begins?

Tucked away in (c) (5) is this language:

Subject to provisions of law specifically applicable to Government corporations, to determine the necessity for and the character and amount of its expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, and paid—

I frankly confess I do not know exactly what this means, but I think it means that the Administration will run its own show, with complete financial independence of the Congress and the Bureau of the Budget. There is a small show of budgetary responsibility in section 7 (e), but this appears to me to be nullified by section 12 (e) which provides for advances from the Treasury to meet costs of revenue-producing projects.

On April 19 when Senator MAGNUSON, with other Senators, submitted his bill for CVA—S. 1645—he also submitted a group of questions and answers purporting to be an analysis of the bill. An objective examination of this list of questions and answers indicates either that the supporters of the Columbia Valley Administration have not read, or do not understand, the purport of the bill itself, or that somebody is deliberately trying to misrepresent the content of the proposed act. To consider a few of the points discussed:

Question. Can the proposed CVA be compared with TVA?

Answer. The proposed CVA has the same goal as the TVA: The full and unified conservation, development, and use of the natural resources of the respective regions. • • • The CVA proposal, however, is not as all-embracing as the TVA. The CVA bill is tailored specifically to suit the particular situation in the Columbia Valley, which differs in many respects from the Tennessee Valley.

I do not believe that this is an accurate portrayal of the content of the bill. As I have pointed out above, unless I grossly misunderstand the implications of the language of the bill, the powers granted are broad and all-embracing as far as control of the development of all the natural resources of the Columbia Valley is concerned. It is true that only specific mention of the absorption of the functions of the Corps of Engineers, Bonneville Power Administration, and the Bureau of Reclamation is made, but the authority to take over and operate all functions connected with natural resources development in the valley resides in the bill. It also resides in the TVA Act. I believe that it is a fair statement that a major part of any success that the Tennessee Valley Authority has had is ascribable to the fact that it has not used the broad grant of authority contained in its basic act of authorization. It has been wise in relying upon cooperation with the States, land grant colleges, and other Federal agencies, but, and this is important, it does not have to do so, for the authority resides in the act for it to proceed in a thoroughly autocratic manner, completely ignoring the cooperative facilities that it is now using. I believe that such a grant of authority to any agency is dangerous and completely subversive to traditional successful democratic principles of government. It is wise to avoid government by the whim or will of a triumvirate of men. It is wise to circumscribe and limit severely the authority of such a board of directors as it is proposed to create, and to do this in the beginning.

Certainly, it is true that the Columbia Valley differs greatly from the Tennessee Valley. The arguments that were advanced at the time of the enactment of the TVA Act were that the economy of the Tennessee Valley was at a very low ebb, its natural resources destroyed or undeveloped, the river untamed, all supposed to be the result of two centuries of unbridled exploitation. It must be recalled, also, that one of the most potent arguments advanced was the extremely low level of living of the inhabitants of the Tennessee Valley. These conditions certainly do not obtain in the Columbia Valley. The President, himself, in his special message to the Congress, recommending the creation of CVA, said:

The Pacific Northwest has been developing very rapidly in recent years. The population has jumped 37 percent since 1940. • • • Total income payments have increased 200 percent since before the war in those three States as compared to 150 percent for the country as a whole. The per capita income is among the highest in the Nation. • • • These are signs of the progressive energy of the people of the region and of the growth that can occur there.

In short, we are doing very well in the Pacific Northwest—better than the rest of the country, and without any valley administration.

Further, the President stated:

The Columbia Valley Administration Administration would have the advantages of a sound foundation of basic planning already done and a large construction program already under way.

This does not appear to indict severely the progress that has been made under administrative conditions as they have existed.

The Secretary of the Treasury, John W. Snyder, in Portland, Oreg., talking about bonds, not valley administration, said:

Oregon led all the States of the Union in total income gain with a 206-percent increase. Every one of these six far-western States showed income gains since 1940 far in excess of the national average gain.

These statements do not indicate any crying need for a new agency with a vast grant of all-embracing power to do work which is, by the statements of leading men in the administration, already being done, and well done. The economy of the Northwest is a developing and pioneering economy.

A major distinction between the two valleys is that those lands from which floods originate—the high lands and the wild lands—in the Columbia Valley, are already all or nearly all in Federal ownership and under as good administration as can be had within the limits of congressional appropriations for that purpose. If they are not being managed to the highest degree of competence of the responsible agencies, the fault does not lie with the administrative system, it lies with the inability of Congress, or its unwillingness, to finance necessary capital investments in management facilities. I do not believe the creation of a CVA would help the administration of these critical watershed lands, nor would it probably hinder them. The latter is the more probable in view of the overwhelming importance that would be assumed by dam-building and irrigation developments in any administration founded, as this one would be, upon the concept that a major part of its income would be from such facilities. Forestry, range management, and watershed management would be worse submerged in such a set-up than they are now where they at least have independent status before the Bureau of the Budget and the Appropriations Committees and can really have their chance to achieve adequate financial status. I do not believe such would be the case under a CVA.

In the Tennessee Valley, Federal ownership of lands was confined to a few small areas in national forest ownership. These have been left practically undisturbed by the TVA, and wisely so. It is worthy of note, however, that under the authority of TVA there has been no work permitted by the Soil Conservation Service within the Tennessee Valley. I have been informed that progress along lines of soil conservation in the Tennessee Valley is no better and no worse than that in the rest of the country.

It is, indeed, a wide open question as to whether or not the progress that has been made under the TVA could not have been made just as well and with less friction by the investment of the huge sums of money that have been spent in the valley under the ordinary system of governmental procedure.

Question. What will be the specific functions of the CVA?

Answer. The Administration will be responsible for the preparation of unified programs for the conservation, development, and use of the natural resources of the Pacific Northwest. These programs will cover irrigation, flood control, electric power, commercial and sport fish and wildlife protection, recreation, mineral exploration and development, soil and forest and range conservation, pollution control, and related functions.

That sounds like a beautiful statement, "the preparation of unified programs." Where are all the points of disunity in present programs that cannot be remedied through the simple mechanisms proposed by the report of the Hoover Commission, if such exist, and I know of some? They are not difficult to adjust. To me there is something far more sinister involved in this planning function that is delegated to CVA under the bill. The Forest Service, Fish and Wildlife Service, the Park Service, Soil Conservation Service, and other agencies involved are parts of large national bureaus created to perform certain functions. They perform them in conformity with national policies. They are administratively responsible to their own bureau administrations and to their responsible departmental authorities. It is not good administration, and cannot be so conceived, to delegate to a separate, all-embracing administration, such as CVA, the authority for preparing plans and then delegate the responsibility for their execution to the list of agencies given above. Neither can the administration of natural resources in the Pacific Northwest be carried out apart from national programs. Lip service is given in the bill toward coordination with national programs, but the Administration, if it functions as normally most such organizations function, will accumulate rather than disburse authority. It has the power. I believe it will function that way. Remember that the proposed Administration may use the facilities of existing Federal agencies and, if ordered to by the President, must do so. So we would be dependent entirely upon political pulling and hauling between the Administration, the Chief Executive, and the responsible Federal agencies as to who would do what.

Question. Will the CVA take over lock, stock, and barrel all the resource functions of existing Federal agencies?

Answer. No.

Question. Will the functions of the United States Forest Service, the United States Soil Conservation Service, Bureau of Mines, National Park Service, Fish and Wildlife Service, and other Federal agencies be taken over by the CVA?

Answer. No.

The two answers given immediately above indicate only the immediate sugar-coated policy that is embodied in the bill but do not indicate the authorities that are granted to the Administration under the language of the bill. As I have already pointed out, the language is so all-embracing that if and when the Administration feels in political position to do so, it can, and I believe would, absorb all functions of all the agencies given above. The fact that the supporters of the proposed Administration at the moment do not think it expeditious to propose absorption of these functions can in nowise be interpreted as prohibiting their absorption when the time becomes convenient.

Question. Will the people of the region and their local agencies have a voice in the management of the CVA?

Answer. Yes, a large voice. The bill provides, in several places, for a strong degree of "home rule, CVA shall seek and rely upon the advice and assistance."

But it does not have to take any of the advice and it does not have to rely upon assistance. It can do as it pleases. I believe that such a grant of authority is bad. It is one thing to consult and ask advice and it is another thing to be required to conform to the will of the people of a region.

There is much more of this question-and-answer program, but I have given enough to indicate my belief that the propaganda being put out concerning the proposed CVA is deliberately misleading, and that misinformation as to the actual purport of the bill is being widely disseminated under the high-sounding allegation that nonexistent chaos is to be made orderly, that resources that are already being developed and managed are as if by some magic to be developed more rapidly, that by some magical process dams are going to be built faster and, I suppose, cheaper.

The functions it is proposed to delegate to the CVA are already functions of the Federal Government that are being well-handled, or at least as well-handled as I think they would be under any new grant of authority to such a highly centralized administration as it is proposed to create. Dams cost a certain amount of money; irrigation projects cost a certain amount of money. All the things that the authority is supposed to accomplish will cost money out of the Public Treasury. The major difference, as I see it, is that the returns to the Government from the operations under the Administration, instead of going to the Treasury and being reappropriated under the wise guidance of the Bureau of the Budget and congressional committees, will be sidetracked into the Administration fund and subject very much to the will of the Directors of the Administration. Presumably the powerful political organization that it is proposed to create would be able to present more plausible plans and proposals to the budget and the Congress in order to funnel more public funds to capital investments in the Columbia Valley. I do not believe this is at all a valid basis upon which to base such a proposal.

To me this whole proposal is a reversal of those concepts of liberty that have grown up in this country and have found their fullest fruition in the West. Our people understand their dependence upon the natural resources available to them. Under the wise guidance of the Federal agencies entrusted with the management of the wild lands and the watersheds magnificent progress is being made toward putting them in good condition. I am highly optimistic about the future if we are let alone to work out our destiny in cooperation with the agencies with whom we have learned to work so well. The creation of any such autonomous authority as is vested in the Directors of the Administration seems to me to present grave dangers to that development of individual enterprise that has already done so much to increase the prosperity of the Northwest and create a standard of living admitted by the President to be among the highest in the country. We do not need any new centralized organization to assist us. We are doing very well without it. The dangers involved far outweigh any theoretical advantages that may be obtained. Remember that this is a new economy, not an old one such as was already bogged down in its own mud in the Tennessee Valley. We have no human wreckage, no wrecked agricultural economy. If controls are to be instituted on the use of land or forests, they should be instituted in conformity with national plans and never by the design or will of an authority responsible only to the Chief Executive. They should arise from the well-considered will of all the people, and I believe the mechanisms that it is proposed to create here are the negation of any such process.

In short, I see no need for a CVA. We are doing all right. I do see potential grave evils in the proposed set-up that far outweigh any potential benefits.

THE STRUGGLE FOR SOLVENCY IS THE PEOPLE'S FIGHT

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, the time has come when thoughtful citizens must decide some basic questions of government.

Do these citizens favor inauguration of more Federal programs? Do they favor our present economic system? Do they feel we can survive with enormous Federal budgets? Do they think the Federal Treasury is inexhaustible? Do they believe we can go on enlarging Government, increasing its services and handouts and, at the same time, reduce costs? Do they believe established Federal programs and activities should be reduced? Do they really care if our Government becomes bankrupt?

The recent alarm apparent in many parts of the country concerning the condition of the United States Treasury is wholesome. I hope, however, that this concern is not too late. The country must not become hysterical. We must not fail to clearly analyze the situation. The threat to our national solvency results from many governmental actions taken over a period of years. Our basic convictions as to the functions and purposes of government are involved.

True, it is proper and desirable to reduce all waste in our Federal Government; but if this were accomplished, we still would have a too costly Government—a Government so weighty that it is doubtful whether our free-enterprise system could survive. We must, therefore, reduce the size of Government; lessen the fields of governmental activity, and the people must give up some Government services and functions.

Considerable attention and some hope have sprung from efforts here in Washington to reduce this or that expenditure by 5 or 10 percent. Of course, these reductions ought to be made. Far more important, however, is a demand from the American taxpayers to halt expansion of our Federal Government. This demand should have been made at the close of World War II.

The Eightieth Congress did not reach all its objectives. It made an honest try. It halted the expansion of socialism. It effected many economies. It set up a system of law in the field of labor-management relations and it reduced the taxes for all. The effect on our economy was noticeable. Upon Mr. Truman's election a program of increased spending, repeal of the Labor-Management Relations Act, and increased taxes was announced. It hurt the country. Farm prices have steadily declined. Confidence has been shaken. Unemployment is on the increase.

The Roosevelt-Truman administration has carried on a systematic, vigorous, expensive and continuous campaign for a bigger and bigger Federal Government. Right now the greatest drive in our history is on in Washington to enlarge our Federal Government. Proposals to federally finance our schools, to build our homes, to pay our medical bills, to police our employment and to initiate countless other programs are being high-pressured in Congress.

These programs, if adopted, would continue for years. The path to true economy is not only to adopt a percentage reduction but also to refuse spending schemes in the first place. The Congress has passed too many of the administration's measures. I am disappointed in many of them. However, Congress has defeated many administration proposals. Had it not done so, I doubt whether our Government could have survived.

In this discussion I will omit any reference to the expense of the war. We cannot change that now. We cannot erase that debt. It must be paid. But a false philosophy of government, the wrong notion of governmental functions can be more dangerous to this Republic than the war debt. Even before the war ended, it was apparent that when hostilities did cease, our Federal Government would be overloaded with financial obligations even if no additional burdens were undertaken.

On the other hand, many long-established departments of our Government have functions so interwoven with our economy that their abolition is not feasible. Generous care of our veterans is a Federal obligation. Certain activities such as highways and the development of interstate streams have been policies and programs of our Federal Government for many years. Such activities were neglected during the war. Following hostilities, it was expected that these projects would call for great sums for construction and repair. In addition, a sound conservation program is necessary to prevent deterioration of our productive facilities.

However, realizing that our postwar economy would be weighted with established obligations for the Federal Government, I concluded that I would not cast my vote in Congress to add to the overburdened Federal Government and that my influence would not be used to put that Government into new fields of endeavor.

Consider the financial condition of most State governments. The aggregate debt for all 48 States totals some seventeen billions as compared with two hundred and fifty-two billions of national indebtedness. The majority of State governmental subdivisions are also in sound financial condition. If, then, there were to be expanded government in postwar years, that expansion should have been borne by divisions other than the Federal Government. For these reasons, at times I have voted against proposals that were desired by certain of the people I represent.

The important votes in Congress are usually votes on authorization bills. The vote on a measure which, if enacted, would call for annual appropriations to carry out a program year after year has a far greater effect on our economy than efforts to cut annual appropriations 5 or 10 percent. However, I would not minimize the importance of these percentage reductions.

Today, thoughtful citizens over the country are looking with hope to the efforts of the senior Senator from Virginia, the Honorable HARRY BYRD, in his drive toward economy. He should have the cooperation of everyone.

There has been condemnation of some of us who voted against such legislation as the British loan and the Marshall plan. My vote on these issues coincided with Senator BYRD's. And certainly he is neither an isolationist nor a pacifist. Of course, I would not want to give aid and comfort to pro-Communists or to those who contend we have no worldwide responsibilities. But bankrupting our Government on which the free world depends would be the surest method of aiding Communist forces in the world. Because of the strain of giant spending programs on our fiscal structure, I determined to oppose such measures.

Attention should be focused on the effect of these tremendous foreign aid programs upon the United States' citizens. One of the most difficult problems is that expenditures of many billions by our Federal Government in foreign lands destroys all restraint on spending here at home. It is not unusual nor rare for a group in this country to demand Federal funds for this or that on the grounds that "we are spending billions abroad and we should meet demands at home as well." These groups usually get their money.

The full employment bill, Public Law 304 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, when originally introduced embodied the philosophy that the Federal Government would see to it that everybody had a job. There were those in the House and the Senate who, like myself, could not accept any such philosophy. We realized that this commitment to the people could and, indeed, might bankrupt the Federal Government. Some, who should have opposed it to the end, supported the measure when it was altered and "watered down." I could not accept their views because the whole notion was bad.

It was this bill that placed on the shoulders of the taxpayers the President's Council of Economic Advisers and created the Joint Committee on the Economic Report. This legislation not only costs money from year to year, but is a vehicle for promoting huge expenditures, boondoggling and selling to the American people the idea that the Federal Treasury is inexhaustible. I do not regret my opposition to this measure.

The country needs hospitals. The State of Nebraska needs hospitals. The territory that I serve needs hospitals. The need cannot be disputed. Who should build these hospitals? Should local units of government—the State, private or fraternal organizations—or the Federal Government? The Seventy-ninth Congress by the passage of Public Law 725 placed the burden on Uncle Sam—the most overburdened fellow in the world. It was a new field of activity for the Federal Government and it is a new program that will go on for years. It was needed. Yes. People wanted it. Yes. But without regard to the Treasury of the United States they demanded these hospitals from the wrong division of our Government.

That same Seventy-ninth Congress in the passage of Public Law 377 decided that we ought to have more airports and that civil aviation should be given a boost. I agreed with both contentions. I could not agree, however, that it was the responsibility of the Federal Government to build airports for municipalities, and I voted against the program. I am an enthusiastic follower of civil aviation and many of my friends are the leaders in that movement. Passage of the bill would raise this question in the minds of many citizens: "If the Federal Government is to build a Federal airport in everyone else's town, why should they not build one in ours?"

Perhaps, in politics, many times we get the wrong idea of what the people believe. But I do not think that I lost the friendship and respect of my friends who were aviation enthusiasts and who wanted airports, when I voted against the program. Certainly, I would like to see their community get an airport, but I would also like to see the finest, the greatest and the best government in the world survive.

Speaking in the Seventy-ninth Congress of those who oppose Federal expansion, the gentleman from Missouri, Hon. CLARENCE CANNON, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, referred to 82 of us who voted against the Federal construction of municipal airports and declared:

> It is a notable list of notable men. They not only preach economy, but, extraordinary as it may seem they actually vote for economy. * * * That list of names ought to be printed in every newspaper in the country. * * * You will recognize a brother of the (economy) bloc when he gives the password. The password is the word "No," spoken clearly and distinctly when the Member's name is called on a vote to appropriate borrowed money for something we can get along without.

I do not think this country can face bankruptcy and, at the same time, continue as a first-rate Nation and a land of liberty and opportunity. For my children, I want first, the land of freedom and liberty.

One of my pet peeves as a Member of the Congress has been the school-lunch program. I have often spoken against it. I voted against the appropriations and when it was authorized by law, I voted against it. I have been accused by some of favoring starvation. Remarks have been hurled at me that I did not want little children well fed. My answer to that is that the children who have lived under the Constitution of the United States and under our economic system of private enterprise have been the best fed children in the entire world.

It was not uncommon in considering school-lunch legislation for a Member of Congress to receive letters and postal cards from little school children saying, "Dear Congressman: Please vote for the school-lunch program." I make no charge against the others, but as for myself, I could not subscribe to a program that would teach the school children of America to look to the Federal Government for something to eat. I could not be guilty of teaching little children to pray, "Our politicians who art in Washington, give us this day our daily bread." Statism and Christianity are wholly incompatible.

It was back in the Seventy-ninth Congress that the Truman administration insisted that there would be widespread unemployment by reason of the termination of war contracts and they asked the Federal Government to underwrite the States' unemployment program. The Federal Government was to raise unemployment compensation to $25 a week and continue it for 26 weeks. If, for instance, a certain State now pays $15 a week for 10 weeks, the Federal Government would add $10 for each of the 10 weeks and then pay the full amount of $25 for the remaining 16 weeks. Mr. Truman demanded its passage. The Ways and Means Committee by a vote of 14 to 10—4 Democrats joined us 10 Republicans—defeated the proposal. There is little doubt that its adoption would have brought about the ultimate federalization of our unemployment compensation systems and there is little doubt that these Federal payments added to State systems would have ever been discontinued. That committee action saved the taxpayers millions and possibly billions of dollars.

Now, it is not only proposed, but demanded that the Federal Government go into the direct building of houses. When will it end? Shall we build a house for everyone? Shall be cease to be a Nation of homeowners?

The drive is on to put the Federal Government in the business of educating our children. It is not a mere suggestion. These programs are demands on the part of the Truman administration. Political pressure, purges, and all the threats in the book will be used. Do the American people want the Federal Government enlarged? Do they want the Government in Washington to control the education of their children? To have Federal support of education without Federal control is comparable to swimming without getting wet.

The drive is also on to turn regulation of employment over to the Federal Government. It is under the guise of noble objectives called the fair employment practice act and civil-rights legislation. The fact is there are millions of people demanding that the policing of employment in every village and hamlet in the country be done by the Federal Government. These people are asking for more and bigger Federal Government. They are asking for more Government services, more Government regulations, more expenditures, and more taxes.

I am totally unimpressed by politicians and others who now are paying lip service to economy, who view with alarm the desperate financial plight in which we find ourselves, who never once opposed a measure that called for the expansion of our Federal Government, who are now insisting that the Federal Government build houses for citizens, educate their children, pay their doctor bills, supplement their wages when they do not work and take care of their wants.

This Nation was founded by hardy people who firmly believed that the citizens should support the Government and not the Government the citizens. That is the way the great State of Nebraska was built despite many adversities. The people who built my home county and my home city were people who accepted the idea that the citizen should support the Government.

A tremendous expansion of the Federal Government resulting in more offices, more bureaus, and more employees is threatened in the offer to citizens of security. There is no security in any unsound financial proposition. There can be no security sponsored by government if that government is on an uneconomical financial basis. Social security for our aged has been accepted by the American people. Some basic changes in that system are greatly needed. Many improvements are necessary. The Truman administration is, however, not only failing to better the program for our people who are now aged but they are attempting to commit our Government in many new fields of so-called security which would in a few years cost as much as $30,000,000,000 a year. I favor an adequate program for our aged. I am firmly convinced, however, that the Federal Government cannot take care of the individual and underwrite him against all hazards from the cradle to the grave, and remain solvent.

It has been truthfully said there has been much blundering going on in Washington. While many individuals in Government have been blundering, there has been strategically planted in too many places architects of destruction who have known what they are doing.

They have known that they are planting the seeds of destruction for this Government and they have skillfully misled the blunderers. The actions taken in the early years of the New Deal, which tampered with the validity of contracts and placed the country on a managed fiat currency, will yet lead to trouble if those actions are not reversed. If disaster comes to us, and I pray that it will not, many men of wealth will foresee it and will protect themselves. The real injury will come to the rank and file of everyday citizens of all ages and in all walks of life.

The struggle for solvency is the people's fight.

VICTOR REUTHER

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California?

There was no objection.

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, I, too, wish to speak about Victor Reuther and the dastardly attempt made on his life Tuesday night. Victor Reuther is the brother of Walter Reuther. Both of these men are looked up to as outstanding labor leaders in the country. A year ago Walter Reuther was shot in his home. Those responsible for this crime have not as yet been apprehended. Now the same identical pattern has been followed in an attempt on the life of his brother, Victor Reuther, who was shot through a window in his home Tuesday night just as Walter Reuther was shot a year ago.

I hope the Federal Government will at once investigate this matter in view of the fact that the Governor of the State of Michigan and the mayor of the city of Detroit and the city council have asked the Federal Government to intervene. The FBI should at once be sent to Detroit to investigate this crime before all clues are lost.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentlewoman from California has expired.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks and include a statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Nation was shocked by a cowardly attempt to assassinate Victor G. Reuther, brother of Walter P. Reuther, the president of the UAW-CIO and, in his own right and on a record of intelligence and courage, an outstanding leader of American labor.

The attempt made on the life of Victor was similar in many respects to the attempt made on the life of his brother. A shotgun blast of heavy slugs was fired through the window of the home under cover of darkness.

Yesterday the Detroit Common Council adopted a resolution urging President Truman, Gov. G. Mennen Williams, of Michigan, and J. Edgar Hoover to order the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Michigan State Police to join with the Detroit Police Department in solving this assassination attempt, which, in its characteristics, is so similar to the earlier attempt upon the life of Walter Reuther as to suggest a cold-blooded, implacable conspiracy. I insert in the RECORD an excerpt from the minutes of the Detroit Common Council meeting, signed by Thomas D. Leadbetter, city clerk, and also a telegram from Gov. G. Mennen Williams to President Truman:

The Detroit Common Council, by resolution urges the President of the United States, Gov. G. Mennen Williams, of Michigan, and J. Edgar Hoover, to order the FBI and the Michigan State police, respectively, to join with the Detroit police department in making a thorough investigation of the brutal shooting of Victor Reuther on Tuesday night. Council President George Edwards suggested international motives might be behind the shooting.

THOMAS D. LEADBETTER, City Clerk.

The people of Michigan are profoundly shocked and angered by the brutal shooting of Victor G. Reuther under the same circumstances as surrounded the attempted assassination of his brother, Walter Reuther, president, UAW-CIO. There are indications that shooting may transcend local interest, and I have already ordered all police agencies in the State of Michigan to devote their best efforts to the case. I join with the Common Council and mayor of Detroit to urge you, Mr. President, to put all facilities of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and other appropriate Federal agencies on this case, that the perpetrators against decency and law may be swiftly caught and public order and confidence restored.

G. MENNEN WILLIAMS,
Governor of Michigan.

I quote the last sentence of the council's minutes:

Council President George Edwards suggested international motives might be behind the shooting.

I also quote this sentence from Governor Williams' telegram:

There are indications that shooting may transcend local interest, and I have already ordered all police agencies in the State of Michigan to devote their best efforts to the case.

Mr. Speaker, it is high time that this attempt to institute a reign of terror in the city of Detroit and against the Reuthers, who have made major contributions to the entire labor movement in the past 15 years, be exposed and broken, and that those responsible be brought to justice, tried, and given appropriate punishment.

It should be pointed out, it seems to me, that Detroit Council President George Edwards was not speaking idly when he suggested that there might be international motives back of the shooting. Victor G. Reuther is one of the four labor members of the Anglo-American Council on Productivity and is chairman of the labor group. That committee was appointed by Paul Hoffman, ECA Administrator. Its purpose was to work with ECA to give technological assistance in the great recovery effort now being made in the United Kingdom. He attended meetings in London and elsewhere in Britain designed to promote the success of the Marshall plan through ECA, meeting with labor and other groups to discuss the hard, practical questions of production under the many handicaps that face British industry, workers and employers alike.

Earlier, he was a member of a CIO delegation at a meeting of a trade union advisory committee consisting of labor representatives from nations participating in the ERP program.

Both Walter and Victor Reuther know the score on both Fascist and Communist totalitarianism. They saw both in action while they were employed as workers in Germany and in Russia during a trip which they made around the world during the last depression.

No man has surpassed Walter Reuther in his fight against Communist totalitarianism in all its many fronts and disguises, within and without the great union of which he is the democratically elected president. No man has been more successful in that fight. And Victor G. Reuther, as has been true since the days when the great union which they helped to build was in its beginnings, has been his blood brother and his union brother, his loyal coworker and associate, working on the great UAW-CIO team to make secure genuine democracy within that union, to win some measure of industrial democracy in relations with management, and to strengthen and make more secure our political democracy.

Mr. Speaker, I ask President Truman that he instruct J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, to comply immediately with the request for assistance made by the Detroit Common Council and Gov. G. Mennen Williams, of Michigan. I believe that the outraged conscience of America demands concerted local, State, and Federal action to bring the perpetrators of these crimes, and the coconspirators behind them, if any there be, to speedy justice and punishment.

HON. PETE JARMAN

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, one of the most valuable Members of the House I ever served with is our former colleague from Alabama, Pete Jarman. I was particularly pleased to note yesterday that the President nominated Pete Jarman for the responsible diplomatic post of Ambassador to Australia. Those of us who served with Pete Jarman know that he will render outstanding service. His many years of service on the Committee on Foreign Affairs equips him, and gives him the background to act as a valuable member of our diplomatic service and to ably perform the duties of his important post in Australia.

We of the House, without regard to party, are pleased with the nomination of Pete Jarman. We congratulate Pete and his good wife, who is such a close helpmate of his, and we particularly congratulate President Truman in his wisdom in making such an excellent suggestion.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. VORYS. I am delighted at the news the gentleman has given the House, and I want to join with the gentleman in everything he has said. We thought a great deal of Pete Jarman, on our committee. With his charming, courtly manners, and his fine mind he should make a good addition to our diplomatic staff; and we also congratulate the President upon his nomination.

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, like my distinguished colleagues, Mr. McCORMACK and Mr. VORYS, I should like to take this opportunity to voice my sentiments with reference to the President's nomination to the office of Ambassador to Australia of my esteemed friend—Pete Jarman. I am confident that the warmth of Pete Jarman's genial personality and the graciousness of his charming wife will endear them to the people of Australia. Pete Jarman has been an able student of foreign affairs for many years. His avid application to economic subjects and foreign affairs has fortified him with vast knowledge so necessary in the important task to which he has been nominated. This Nation and Australia are fortunate to have representing the United States a man of such sterling character, breadth of vision and understanding. With Pete Jarman as our Ambassador in Australia we may be assured that the bonds of friendship existing between these two great countries will continue and we may look forward to even more favorable, prosperous and cordial relations.

VOTE AGAINST ECA BILL

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I desire the RECORD to show at this point that I voted against the ECA appropriation bill just passed.

CHAIRMAN OF THE ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, the Atomic Energy Commission, being one of the most important and delicate organs of our Government, I think all Americans should be deeply gratified by the high-minded spirit of public service being shown under great stress by the Chairman of that Commission, who on two successive days now has done two things every American should admire and applaud in a Government servant: First, taken the burden of the mistake of one of his subordinates on his own shoulders in saying that it was his responsibility; and, second, inviting, because of the critical importance of the task of AEC, the most widespread inquiry into all his own actions as Chairman, and the operations of the Commission. I think it augurs very well for the result to the Nation that this investigation is to be undertaken by the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy, particularly charged with the responsibility for this Commission. This committee should—and I am sure will—proceed with justice, and, in view of the demonstrated talent for public service and fine public spirit shown by this great public servant, the Chairman of the AEC, and by his distinguished colleagues on the Commission, with care.

There is appended hereto the text of the plea for an investigation referred to above:

Hon. BRIEN MCMAHON,
Chairman, Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MCMAHON: A full, complete and speedy report on the charges that the United States atomic energy program is virtually a failure is a matter urgently necessary; the investigation initiated by the McMahon committee and to be carried out by it is welcomed.

The charges by Senator HICKENLOOPER of incredible mismanagement, misplaced emphasis, and maladministration involve nothing less than the security of this Nation and the peace in the world.

If it is true that the atomic-energy program is in an almost bankrupt condition, then this Nation, far from being the custodian and trustee of a substantial stock pile of atomic weapons, and in a favorable production situation, is in a sadly weakened condition. If this were true it is difficult to imagine any single fact more disturbing to the peace of mind of the people of the country or to the security of the world's democracies.

The facts on this crucial test of our stewardship can be readily established.

That in an enterprise requiring the services of some 60,000 human beings there have been mistakes and errors goes without saying; this has been freely admitted. Working with the atom does not make human beings perfect and beyond error. For these errors and mistakes the Commission has and will continue to accept full responsibility. The failure to follow explicit Commission regulations in the matter of the uranium oxide at the Argonne laboratory in Chicago is such an instance. In the handling of many of thousands of tons of crucial materials, in various forms, the Commission and its contractor-employees have sought and will continue to seek to improve on methods of accountability, that will keep the element of human fallibility at a minimum; no system can eliminate the human factor entirely.

Among the hundreds of decisions of policy thus far made by the commission, and those that will be made in the future, there are many the soundness of which is and will be subject to differences of judgment among equally sensible men. Such a case is that concerning scholarships for nonsecret study, awarded by the National Research Council of the National Academy of Sciences as contractor for the Commission. The policy of the council and the Commission has in the last 10 days been changed to meet the objections, on public policy grounds, strongly expressed by Members of the Congress. But the difference was one of judgment on which equally patriotic and reasonable men could have and do entertain differing views. The export to scientists abroad, of isotopes, announced by the President in September 1947, is another instance. This was done upon the unanimous recommendation of distinguished advisers of the Commission. There are bound to be cases of underestimating of construction costs by contractors of the Commission in connection with urgently needed facilities of a wholly new kind. These are properly subject to criticism. But they were common experience during the war and today in industry generally.

The Joint Committee on Atomic Energy of the House and Senate was established by the McMahon Act to review and consider, among other things, differences of judgment on policy, and to receive and consider and appraise the rate of progress, or lack of progress in the substantial work of this project—one of the largest enterprises and most complex in history. Numerous reports, largely secret or top-secret, and frequent hearings, conferences, and staff liaison have made your committee essentially—and rightly so—a continuous congressional investigating committee.

The test of whether there has been and is incredible mismanagement and a grave situation in this country's atomic energy program can be made a quite specific test, or series of tests. The country, I suggest, is entitled to and will want to know the answers to such specific questions as the following, among others, and we welcome the decision of your committee to proceed to the making of such analysis of report.

(1) Has the Commission failed in its stewardship at a time of great tension in its obligation paramount to all others; i. e., the production and improvement of these complex scientific weapons? What is the state of our atomic weapons—the order of magnitude of the stockpile; the improvements made in the last 2½ years in new weapon design. What has been the progress in the last 2½ years of our stewardship? What is the progress today in still further improvements, and the quality of personnel and the morale of those engaged in this work?

(2) How about production of fissionable materials—the essential ingredients of atomic weapons? Is it on a secure basis? What situation did the project face concerning disruption of production and how successful were the steps taken to overcome them? We assert, and our reports to you have made clear, that production is now at the highest level in history, with the same facilities; that new facilities are approaching the production state.

(3) How has basic and applied research progressed since the Commission took responsibility—and where was it when the Commission took over?

(4) How about security?

What was the state of physical protection of plants when the Commission took over? Has this improved, and in what ways?

What about security of secret documents—what was the situation when the Commission began, and what is it today?

What about accountability for source and fissionable materials? What was the situation in 1947? What is it today?

(5) What about the investigation and clearance of personnel—what was the situation, and what is it today?

There are many other areas of inquiry that your committee will engage upon, in addition to those carried on by it continuously as a regular practice in the past.

But the chief question I believe is this: Is this country weak today in atomic weapons and materials, and in their production and improvements, as implied by the broad and grave charges leveled against the Commission?

It can be stated categorically that the record in this respect is a proud one. It is one to give great reassurance to the peoples of the world who as one of this hour rely upon the strength of the United States of America.

In order that the fears and misapprehensions on this score may be settled beyond peradventure and as promptly as it is possible. It is urged that the joint committee call before it immediately not only the Commission, its staff, its principal industrial and university contractors, but also other citizens of the highest renown and technical standing, including the distinguished members of the general advisory committee and other advisory groups for their testimony and appraisal. In this way the dangerous cloud of uneasiness resulting from these charges will be dispelled.

Sincerely yours,

DAVID E. LILIENTHAL,
Chairman, United States Atomic Energy Commission.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

RISE OF ANTI-SEMITISM IN VARIOUS PARTS OF EUROPE

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, in recent months leaders of interfaith movements throughout the world have become increasingly concerned over the rise of anti-Semitism again in various parts of Europe and more particularly in Russia and its satelite states. The attempt is again being made to use Jews as the scapegoat of totalitarian dictatorships. History tells us that such attacks are always the forerunner of similar attacks upon all religious and freedom-loving peoples.

With the horrors of Buchenwald and Dachau still fresh in the minds of people everywhere, the Soviet Union seems to have adopted the Hitler-like policy of singling out Jews in a campaign of vituperation which would have put Herr Goebbels to shame.

The American Jewish Committee, that stanch patriotic national Jewish group, which has such leaders as former Governor Herbert Lehman, as honorory vice president, and former Supreme Court Justice Joseph M. Proskauer, as honorary president, has already termed the campaign against Soviet Jews both violent and official.

Complete documentation of the incredible Soviet campagn to smear the Jewish people of Russia, a campaign obviously directed by the Kremlin, is currently appearing in the New York World-Telegram in a series of articles by Frederick Woltman, the noted authority on communism and a Pulitzer prize winner.

I understand that my colleague from New York [Mr. DOLLINGER] intends to place the entire series of articles in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I hope all our colleagues will read them with care.

On May 19 I wrote a letter to Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt as a member of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, which reads as follows:

DEAR MRS. ROOSEVELT: Your attention no doubt has been directed to the series of articles that have been appearing in the Scripps-Howard newspapers throughout the country and in the World-Telegram locally, indicating that the Soviet government has apparently opened up a drive against Jews living within the confines of its borders.

This matter, I am sure, could not have escaped the attention of one who has been so vigilant in the cause of human freedom. While you and your colleagues on the Human Rights Commission are striving so strenuously to raise the standards of human dignity, we are here confronted with what may easily spread into another Hitlerian conflagration. As you have said so often, totalitarianism whether under the name of fascism, nazism or communism is always a threat to all freedom-loving peoples. These renewed Soviet attacks upon a minority group is but one of the many bad things that such a philosophy of government breeds.

I respectfully suggest that you and your colleagues make inquiry as to the truth of the charges made in these articles and then attempt to devise ways and means of correcting this very grievous situation.

With kindest personal regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

ABRAHAM J. MULTER.

Further proof of the justification of the charges I have made will be found in articles which appeared in the New York press.

On May 19 the New York Herald Tribune carried a news item as follows:

RUSSIA ACCUSED OF ASEMITISM POLICY ON JEWS—LEAGUE'S STUDY DESCRIBES TREND AGAINST JUDAISM AS NONAGGRESSIVE TYPE

The American Jewish League Against Communism, Inc., made public yesterday a study of conditions of Jews in Russia in which the Soviet Government is accused of asemitism or a nonaggressive anti-Jewish attitude as contrasted with anti-Semitism which is aggressively anti-Jewish.

The study was prepared for the league, which has offices at 220 West Forty-second Street, by Gregor Aronson, a former member of the Moscow Soviet and now a member of the editorial staff of Novoye Russkoe Slovo, a Russian-language daily published in New York.

Mr. Aronson's conclusion is that Jews in Russia have been left completely defenseless against Soviet tyranny. "Their past has been stripped from them and their future is bleak," he said. He argued that Russia is trying to stamp out all manifestations of Judaism.

Describing the Soviet Government's attitude as asemitism, Mr. Aronson wrote:

"Asemitism differs from anti-Semitism in that it is not aggressive. It is not Jew hatred in the usual sense of the word. It is more complicated and completely psychological. It seems to be characterized by indifference to the Jews and any matter in which they, as Jews, are involved."

Mr. Aronson accused Russia of bringing asemitism into the open during the period of the Nazi-Soviet pact.

"During this period," he wrote, "the policy of ignoring the Jewish question in general and the Nazi plans for the destruction of the Jews in particular, became a conscious one."

The National Advisory Council of the American Jewish League Against Communism includes Benjamin Gitlow, former Communist official; Councilman Walter R. Hart, Democrat, of Brooklyn; Isaac Don Levine, writer and editor; Eugene Lyons, writer; Representative Abraham J. Multer, Democrat, of Brooklyn; Morrie Ryskind; and George E. Sokolsky, writer.

On May 22 Rodney Gilbert wrote in the New York Herald Tribune as follows:

FEATHERS FROM THE LEFT WING—COMMENT OF SOVIET ANTI-SEMITISM, SOCIALISM, AND SUNDRY MATTERS

(By Rodney Gilbert)

I have been meaning for a long time to remark that the leftist papers from which I quote much stormy rhetoric are not always gritting their teeth and hurling invectives. Many of them regale their readers with excellent cartoons, caricatures, light verse and quips. There is no space here for such material; but I shall make space for two sample quips on the same theme—Russian inventive genius. This one appeared in a recent number of the U. E. News, organ of the embattled left-wing electrical workers: "Did you see where a Russian claims to have invented movies that smell? Couldn't be. We've been seeing such for years." Then this is from the New Leader (social democratic): "Russia's extravagant claims of having pioneered all inventions do not go far enough. To be consistent she should claim credit for the original chaos at the dawn of creation." In its Ted Tinsley, the Daily Worker has a real grade A satirist, but to me its angry extravagances are always highly diverting. The Daily Worker has vied with other leftists in the invention of such descriptions of the unsubsidized daily papers as "the commercial press," "the dollar press" and "the kept press." But, being exceptionally angry about the publicity given to renegade Communists, a Daily Worker editorial of May 11 sought and found a new name for us. We are now the prostitute press.

That new independent socialist publication, the Monthly Review, which the Socialist Call hailed unfraternally a few weeks ago as another Communist front paper, is off the press. Having no knowledge whatever of the inspiration behind it, I cannot endorse the Call's description of it; but, in an introductory statement, the editors, Messrs. Leo Huberman and Paul M. Sweezy, frankly announce that their attitude toward Stalinism is by no means hostile. They define the objectives of socialism as they see them, and then say: "The possibility and workability of such a system of society are no longer open to doubt.

"Socialism became a reality with the introduction of the first 5-year plan in Soviet Russia in 1928. * * * We find completely unrealistic the view of those who call themselves Socialists, yet imagine that socialism can be built on an international scale by fighting it where it already exists."

SIX KINDS OF SOCIALISM

Now, besides the Communist Party, there are at least six groups in this country propagating what each thinks is socialism. Each finds most of the others at fault in some way—to put it mildly; but all agree informally on one thing, and that is that Stalinism is not socialism or communism of any kind, living or dead. I am sure that these editors are going to hear that from most if not all of these sects. If they could only be brought to say it in chorus, no one but the Kremlin's own fifth columnists would have the temerity to allege that socialism has been a reality in Russia since 1928. Elsewhere, in their introductory statement, these editors tell of the decline of socialism in America's esteem since the days of Eugene Debs, until now, "for the great majority of Americans socialism is little more than a dirty word." They are going to hear from many sources the obvious explanation of that. Because the various schools of socialism do not get together and denounce the Muscovite use of the word socialism, and because the American people have acquired a better understanding of the enslavement of the Russian people and other victim peoples, from year to year, socialism is to the majority a "dirty" Russian institution.

I have already given space several times to the leftist reaction to Soviet anti-Semitism. Now that this has boiled up out of the obscure publications of the cultists into "the prostitute press," the anger and alarm of the Communist Party is vociferously expressed. I have a little stack of clippings from the Daily Worker—editorials, special articles, and advertisements on the subject. An exhibition to show how the lot of the Jews in Poland has been improved has been hastily arranged. The pro-Stalinist Jewish Labor Congress has been thrown into action against the anti-Stalinist Jewish Labor Committee. The cartoonist Gropper has been called upon to wire back from Moscow to tell how Stalin esteems and honors Jewish cultural leaders. To our local fifth columnists this charge of anti-Semitism seems to be far more disturbing, indeed, than the international resentment of Cardinal Mindszenty's treatment. Why the Kremlin should risk the hostility of world Jewry at this point and the loss of Zionist esteem, gained through support of Israel in the United Nations, must be a baffling question to many observers. I think that the answer is to be found in an article written last November by one Valentin Toma on the brutal liquidation of the Greek Catholic or Uniate Church in Rumania, forced into "coordination" with the orthodox church after the latter had been geared to Stalinism. This is reproduced in the New International (junior Trotskyist) for March. Read this paragraph:

SOVIET ANTI-SEMITISM

"Stalin's puppet popular democracies, like all other totalitarian dictatorships, are driving hard toward the integration of every section of social life into their regimes. Nothing—absolutely nothing—is permitted to escape this drive. Sooner or later the ruling Stalinist party gets around to the "gleichschaltung" (as the Nazis used to call it) of the smallest youth organization, the most timid women's movement, the most insignificant sport association, the most distant reading circle, and finally, even the humblest parish. Willy-nilly, all of them are laced into the strait jacket." That was written to explain why the Uniate Church had to be extinguished. Old Bolshevism fought Russian Orthodoxy and propagated atheism, because the church in Russia was geared to czarism. During the war there was a resurgence of religious feeling in Russia which the Kremlin dared not try to suppress. Instead it found religious leaders who were ready to gear it to Stalinism and to declare blasphemously that "the voice of Stalin is the voice of God." So the Russian Orthodox Church, now as completely subservient to Stalinism as it once was to czarism, and as much an instrument of policy, is the one church to which all Christian organizations in the captive nations must be geared or perish. The Uniate Church looked to the Vatican and not to Uncle Joe, professed atheist, for intermediation with God. So, like the little Protestant bodies in Bulgaria, it just had to be extinguished.

REASONS BEHIND THE CAMPAIGN

But what has this to do with the Jews, and with the Kremlin's dissemination of ill will against them—as rootless cosmopolites—in Russia and among the victim peoples? It is simply that they have dared to turn their backs on the Kremlin and look at Israel with lively interest. The small fry, whose anxiety to get there suited the Kremlin while it worried the British, are now having a very evil influence upon the millions of others who would like to be anywhere but in the Red Elysium. Then, the interest of the intellectuals in Israel diverts their attention from that glorious light in the sky over the Kremlin to all kinds of world doings and stimulates a hunger for knowledge of them which would, in itself, be a menace to the security of the grand Red khanate. The little Jews who are setting everyone else such a rotten example by abandoning all they own to scramble up a gangplank onto anything outward bound, have got to be slapped down. Their bunds, their Mapams, their educational farm colonies, must be wiped out at once. And so it has been most vigorously done. And the warning to the highly placed Jewish intellectuals in Russia is: "Attention. Or else."

So I have used nothing out of a great mass of clippings on the lifting of the Berlin blockade, the show-down fight between the CIO and the Stalin-dominated unions, and the flight of Gerhart Eisler—whose rearrest in a British port is, of course, a disgrace to humanity in the Daily Worker. But since I found the New Republic's last special supplement on the Fair Deal, a bundle of twaddle, I must add here that that paper's most recent supplement (May 16) is a swell job. It is a report on a symposium. The question put to a number of real and alleged authorities was: "How strong is Soviet Russia?" The meek mumblings of fellow travelers, who usually yelp like coyotes, will be most depressing to the cognoscenti just off Union Square.

The only answer, and that is not official, that I have seen with reference to these charges is that Soviet Russia and her satellite states are not attempting to throttle Judaism but are attempting to stamp out Zionism. Such an answer is merely an evasion of the charge.

Only yesterday our distinguished Secretary of State Dean Acheson pointed out in Paris, France, that Russia and its satellite states consistently refused to permit the outside world to know what goes on behind the iron curtain.

I join Secretary Acheson in challenging the Soviet authorities to permit the representatives of the United Nations to enter Soviet Russia in order to freely determine the true state of affairs.

Mr. DOLLINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DOLLINGER. Mr. Speaker, Soviet Russia has long pretended to the world that it was a model of racial equality, in its campaign for world dominance. It sought the support of the smaller powers and brought them into a federation controlled by the Kremlin on the strength of promises of equality.

It was, therefore, all the more startling to read a series of articles recently written for the New York World-Telegram by Frederick Woltman, a writer of integrity and ability—a former Pulitzer prize winner—wherein the true picture was pointed out. We find that Russia is waging a fierce campaign against leading Jewish intellectuals of Russia to purge them from the cultural life of the country. This incredible development in a nation where discrimination is supposed to be a state crime was definitely established recently from very authoritative sources.

It has been shown that Russian Jews are being persecuted, that the Kremlin is following Hitler's pattern and that the Russian Jews are the 1949 victims of Stalin's mounting cold war on the western democracies. The same old tricks are being used—a special vocabulary has emerged—the Jews being called rootless cosmopolitans, lowly cringers; the Soviet press now adds, in parentheses, the Jewish family names of artists, writers, and professional people, whose Russian-sounding names fail to disclose their Jewish ancestry.

Hitler, in his rise to power screamed out the accusations that the German Jews were under-cover allies of the Anglo-American warmongers, betrayers of German destiny—the very same attack which Russia is now using.

We are told that the Soviet Union has ruthlessly suppressed Zionism for the last 30 years. Many thousands have been exiled to Siberia. Hebrew, the religious language of the Jews is banned, and Judaism has virtually been obliterated in the Soviet Union. We see the pattern repeated—the persecution of the Jews being the first step in a program of world conquest.

I believe that this campaign in Russia against the Jews is one which should have the attention of this House and our Nation, and that we should take necessary steps to call these acts of the Kremlin to the attention of people the world over. Russia—the motherland of communism—which has profited greatly by her pretended belief in equality for all should be exposed. The spotlight should be focused directly upon her. In her cruel and ruthless purge of the Jews, she certainly does not practice what she preaches—and those to whom she would sell her ideology should know of her deceit.

Six million Jews have already perished because of similar tactics under Hitler. Likewise, many millions of others in minority groups have been annihilated in such programs of terror. Let us not keep silent until it is too late and more millions suffer a similar fate. It is possible for all human beings, regardless of their religion, color, creed, or nationality to live together as one. It is America's duty to lead the way. This House should focus the spotlight upon Russia and also request Eleanor Roosevelt, who heads the Commission on Human Rights in the United Nations, to lay the facts before that body for such action as would be appropriate and effective.

Under unanimous consent, I insert in the RECORD the articles referred to, written by Mr. Woltman, which deal with this vital question, and in which he so succinctly discusses the problem. In my opinion, the articles should be read by all people who are interested in equality for all.

MOSCOW HATE BARRAGE BLASTS JEWS—NAZI-LIKE ANTI-SEMITISM PERILS INTELLECTUALS, DENOUNCES ISRAEL

(By Frederick Woltman)

Nazilike attacks against Jews have become government policy in Soviet Russia.

The U. S. S. R., long held forth to the world as a model of racial equality, is waging a fierce campaign against leading Jewish intellectuals of Russia to purge them from the cultural life of the country.

Since January, the Soviet press and Communist Party apparatus have been pouring out tirades reminiscent of Hitler's unceasing and self-serving crusades against "the international Jew."

Such a barrage, loosed by the government and press of America, would be regarded here as the worst kind of anti-Semitism.

CAMPAIGN CALLED VIOLENT

Coupled with it, the Kremlin has launched a parallel onslaught on Zionism and on the leaders of Israel who, the Kremlin spokesmen charge, would sell out their own people "for the sake of the dollar."

This incredible development—in a nation where discrimination is supposed to be a state crime—was established in a survey by the World-Telegram, based chiefly on Jewish sources. One of them, the American Jewish Committee, terms the campaign against Soviet Jews both violent and official.

Thus far, only fragmentary reports have come through the world's tightest censorship from Moscow.

But they are sufficient to arouse grave concern among the leaders of American Jewry, who wonder if the Jews once again are to be made the scapegoats of a totalitarian regime.

Meanwhile, the American Communists are running true to form. On the issues of Zionism and the new State of Israel, they have faithfully echoed the Moscow line. Zionist leaders, inside Israel and out, according to the Freiheit, official Yiddish organ of the Communist Party, are trying to transform Israel into a bastion of Jewish reaction and a prop of Anglo-American imperialism.

CULTURAL FIELD HIT

Recently, greatly embarrassed, the party here has sought to explain away dispatches which reported Soviet denunciations of Jews.

The campaign against the Jewish intellectuals, the survey showed, encompasses the entire field. It includes the theater, literature, music, the cinema, poetry, philosophy, science, even the sports.

Their crime, as charged, is cosmopolitanism, an expression exhumed from the anti-Semitic writers of Czarist Russia. Because of their ties outside Russia, their kinship through a common language with the Jews in the rest of the world, Jewish writers, artists and scientists in the U. S. S. R. suddenly became cosmopolitans.

Master mind of the crusade was Alexander Fadayev, head of the Soviet writers' union and chief Russian delegate to the Waldorf-Astoria cultural conference here last March. Pravda, central organ of the Russian Communist Party, touched off the fuse on January 29. The entire Soviet press responded promptly with extraordinary venom.

TARGET BECOMES CLEAR

That their target was the Jews became clear almost at once—by resort to the concept of the wandering Jew.

Thus, today's internal enemies of the U. S. S. R. are not only cosmopolitans, they're the homeless cosmopolitans.

Love of Country; Hatred of Cosmopolitans was the title of an editorial in the Literary Gazette, authoritative organ of the Soviet writers' union on February 12. "It is our patriotic duty to eliminate these passportless vagrants, these stowaways, these people with no kin, no country," screamed the Gazette.

SPECIAL VOCABULARY

A special vocabulary emerged to fit the new crime. Its perpetrators, according to the Soviet press, are:

"Rootless cosmopolitans, lowly cringers, double-facers, shameless aesthetes, salesmen, hooligan-like, antipatriots, double-dealers with traitors' souls, no tribe—no fatherland—no country."

Also "Jewish bourgeois nationalists."

Part of the pattern is somehow to identify the Jewish intellectuals under fire with the western democracies which, in the Communists' dictionary, are synonymous with reactionary and imperialist.

"In whatever clothes it is arrayed," declared the Literary Gazette in March 2, "whatever its pseudonym, whether the guise be pan-Americanism, Catholicism, Zionism, or any other name, cosmopolitanism actively serves the interests of the imperial reaction."

CRIME DEFINED

Since neither pan-Americanism nor Catholicism carry much weight in the U. S. S. R., Zionism would appear to be the principal offender.

Konstantin Simonov, the Soviet writer, defined the crime as "the desire to undermine the national roots of national pride because people without roots are easier to push over and sell into slavery to American imperialism."

The Communist Daily Worker simply calls cosmopolitanism the cultural weapon of Wall Street imperialists.

How the drive against cosmopolitanism is further applied to Russian Jews will be developed in detail tomorrow.

MOSCOW ADOPTS CLASSIC TACTICS OF ANTI-SEMITES

(By Frederick Woltman)

The standard device of anti-Semites the world over—subtly reiterating the racial origin of their Jewish targets—has now become standard practice in Soviet Russia. For the past 3 months the official Soviet press has used it on a wholesale scale against leading Jewish intellectuals in the Kremlin's drive to purge all Russian cultural life of homeless cosmopolitans and people without tribe.

Their technique invariably is to add, in parentheses, the Jewish family names of artists, writers, and professional people whose Russian-sounding names fail to disclose their Jewish ancestry.

Thus, when Komsomolskaya Pravda, official organ of Communist youth, on March 6 attacked Jewish sports writers as passportless wanderers, it listed them as G. Yasny (Finkelstein), V. Victoroff (Zlochevsky), and A. Svetoff (Sheidlin).

OTHERS ADOPT TECHNIQUE

Pravda, Izvestia, the Bolshevik, Literary Gazette—foremost mouthpieces of the Stalin state—have adopted the same technique, according to a survey by the World-Telegram which disclosed an incredible frontal attack on Jews in the motherland of communism.

Designations like this appear regularly: J. Chatsazav (Meyerowitz), J. Stebun (Katzenelson), L. Zhadanov (Lipschitz), J. Martish (Finkelstein), and L. Sendof (Schmulson).

Emphasis on Jewish origin, rather than identification, is clearly the purpose. For whenever the Russian name appears more than once in the same diatribe, even if only a few lines apart, the Jewish name is invariably tagged on each time.

USED BY NAZIS

The same device of double naming was used by anti-Semitic Russian White Guardists after the Bolshevik revolution to imply Jewish control of the new Soviet state. Later, the Nazis employed it; and so did native Fascist groups in America.

It's unprecedented, both in the USSR and under the Czar.

In contrast, although many non-Jewish Bolshevik leaders took new names for security reasons, you'll never find a news story in the Soviet press about V. M. Molotov (Skriabin) or Josef Stalin (Djugashvili).

VOICE BROADCASTS STORY

So scandalous has the anti-Jewish drive become, the World-Telegram learned, that the State Department seized upon it for America's war of words with the Soviet propaganda machine.

To date, the State Department has taken no official cognizance of it for American consumption. But in the last few days of April, the Voice of America beamed the story overseas in Bulgarian, Czech, Russian, Hungarian, Polish, German, and English.

The series of broadcasts went unpublicized here. To the listeners behind the iron curtain, however, they bore the imprimatur of the United States Department of State.

"In recent months, the Soviet campaign against cosmopolitanism has assumed a certain racial bias which gives it an even greater significance," the broadcasts said. They told of the insertion of Jewish names.

OFFICIALLY INSPIRED

And they referred to recent Moscow dispatches as agreed that the campaign against Jewish critics is officially inspired and anti-Semitic in tone and * * * that the officially inspired campaign to intimidate Jewish writers in the U. S. S. R. casts a cynical light on Communists' pretensions that they are against all forms of racialism.

This is the first time that anti-Semitism has become official in the U. S. S. R. according to Gregor Aronson, a student of current Russian life, expelled former member of the Moscow Soviet and now a staff writer for the New York Russian daily, Noroye Russkoe Slovo.

Because they're so widespread, the attacks on Soviet Jews as cosmopolitans could only have been ordered by the Moscow Politboro, he writes, in a forthcoming documented pamphlet Soviet Russia and the Jews. Published by the American-Jewish League Against Communism, 200 W. 42d St., the study soon will be on sale there for 50 cents.

QUOTES PRAVDA

To show how deeply the anti-Jewish campaign has penetrated all facets of Russian culture, Mr. Aronson quotes the March 5 Pravda, official organ of the U. S. S. R. Communist Party:

"Homeless cosmopolites who know nothing of creative labor, of truth and honor, have crept into our editorial offices, scientific institutions and universities. They are people who feel no duty toward the nation, the state or the party.

"It is our urgent task, therefore, to smoke these bourgeois cosmopolites out of their holes because these individuals without a people or a country hinder the development of Soviet literature."

Out of one list of 50 homeless cosmopolites excoriated in the Soviet press during February and March, he writes only two or three were non-Jews.

That's the pattern of the U. S. S. R.'s astonishing crusade against its internal enemies of 1949, as the third article on the World-Telegram's survey will show further tomorrow.

RUSSIAN JEWS ARE VICTIMS OF KREMLIN'S COLD WAR

(By Frederick Woltman)

Russian Jews are the 1949 victims of Stalin's mounting cold war on the western democracies.

Hitler, in his rise to power, screamed out the accusation that German Jews were undercover allies of the "Anglo-American warmongers," betrayers of Germany's destiny.

Today, in true totalitarian kinship, the powers in the Kremlin plagiarize the Nazis. "Obsequiously looking to the west" and "groveling before the Anglo-American imperialists" are the standard, trumped-up charges of the Soviet propaganda organs against the Jewish intellectuals due to be stamped out of Soviet culture.

They've borrowed another Nazi weapon, the symbol of the hooked nose.

Krokodil, Moscow's satirical magazine, on March 10 ran two pages of cartoons lampooning "homeless cosmopolitans" accused of besmirching Soviet drama, music, poetry, and movies. The "cosmopolitans," as depicted, were particularly loathsome-looking. Several had worm-like bodies. One of the movie critics waved a banner: "Go to Hollywood."

All were drawn with hooked noses, grossly exaggerated.

"Pitiful and unpleasant," says the caption, "are the quiet skeptics, the abstract persons, the passportless vagabonds of the human race."

In a blast at the "cosmopolitan literary critics," the March 20 issue ran a full-page caricature of one, wearing a dagger in his belt and carrying an enormous poison pen. A name tag pasted on his suitcase read "Andre Zhid." This presumably referred to Andre Gide, the French writer who is unpublished and virtually unknown in Russia.

However, the Andre was shaded and the Zhid caught the eye. Zhid, a favorite expression in pogrom literature of Czarist Russia, is familiar to all Russians. The translation is the viciously slanderous word "kike."

"Stamp out completely the foes of the Soviet drama, theater, cinema and of the entire Soviet art—the anti-patriotic group of homeless cosmopolitans and their hangerson," demanded the March 9 Literary Gazette, official mouthpiece of the Soviet writers union.

"We get no help from these critic-cosmopolitans in unmasking serious manifestations of Jewish bourgeois nationalism, in particular in the Almanach, Der Shtern, which we had to suppress. * * * It encouraged nationalistic trends, smug, small-town psychology. It went even so far as to assume that a Jew living abroad is equal to a Soviet Jew."

The American Jewish Committee, a leading national Jewish organization in the United States, declared recently in a report, "Jews Behind the Iron Curtain": "Since the closing of the Moscow Einikeit (in January, 1949) and the Shtern in the Ukraine, there are no Yiddish periodicals left, except possibly in Birobidjan." Birobidjan is the so-called autonomous Jewish Republic in the U. S. S. R.

ASSAILS JEWISH THEATER

N. J. Gusaroy, head of the Byelorussian Communist Party, on February 17 excoriated the one Jewish theater in the White Russian Republic. It "puts on unpatriotic plays in which the patriarchal life of the Jewish petty bourgeoisie was idealized and life in bourgeois America praised. * * * Homeless cosmopolitans, combined with direct obsequiousness to things foreign, have found expression at the Jewish theater."

The theater was closed.

The February 20 issue of Culture and Life, organ of the Communist Party's propaganda department, lambasted "bourgeois cosmopolitan" music critics.

Their offenses: "Groveling before Anglo-American, decadent art" and "depicting a musical paradise in the American land."

Jewish sports writers were excoriated as "passportless wanderers" by Komsomolskaya Pravda, central organ of Communist youth. They were accused of writing that a Soviet wrestler was inspired by Jack London, rather than his love for the motherland, and claiming that football was brought into Russia by employees of the Indo-European Cable Co.

WRITERS SINGLED OUT

Literary Gazette singled out even Jewish writers as "rah-rah cosmopolitans," charging them and the Jewish State Theater in Moscow with "unpatriotic activities."

Because he credited Sir Alexander Fleming with the discovery of penicillin, the well-known Jewish scientist, S. Altschuler, was attacked by Komsomolskaya Pravda as a "homeless cosmopolitan." Everybody knows, said the paper, that the drug was discovered by Russians.

Because it allegedly fell under "American influences," the Soviet Academy of Architecture was completely reorganized last month. The chief offender was Moises Gintsburg. Soviet Art, published in Moscow, accused him of championing western European and American architecture.

"The hostile activities of bourgeois cosmopolitanism," warned Soviet Art, "will be unmasked to the end."

PROFESSOR A SCAPEGOAT

"Unmask the preachers of cosmopolitanism in philosophy," demanded Culture and Life on March 10. This time the scapegoat was the Jewish professor, M. Rosenthal. The offense: His philosophic views of Chernychevsky failed to give enough praise to the patriotism of the Russian philosopher.

"Deliberate neglect of patriotism can only be qualified as bourgeois cosmopolitanism," Culture and Life warned.

ZIONISM OUTLAWED IN RUSSIA

(By Frederick Woltman)

The Soviet Union has ruthlessly suppressed Zionism for the last 30 years.

Since the days of the Bolshevik Revolution, thousands have been exiled to Siberia, never to be heard from again. Hebrew, the religious language of the Jews as well as the tongue of a renascent Palestine, is banned. Jewish religious schools for children are outlawed.

Indeed, the U. S. S. R.'s success in wiping out Zionism is matched only by the extermination of all things Jewish by Hitler's Germany.

And today, the land of the hammer and sickle is the sole power on earth which makes the movement for a Jewish homeland illegal.

KNOWN TO LEADERS

While unknown to the general public, these facts are familiar to key leaders of Jewish groups in this country, such as the World Zionist Organization of America and the American Jewish Congress.

"Since the early twenties, I have never seen any record of Zionist activities in Russia," Carl Alpert, national education director of the World Zionist Organization, told the World-Telegram.

The last open meeting of Zionists took place in Moscow in April 1930. Its backers were arrested, imprisoned and denounced by the new regime as counter-revolutionaries and enemies of the people, charges akin to treason under Communist ideology.

This long-standing hostility to Jewish nationalism now has found a logical outlet. The current wave of intimidation and abuse which the Politburo recently turned on Russian Jews, as revealed by these articles in the World-Telegram.

CAN'T GO TO ISRAEL

Meanwhile, for outside consumption, the U. S. S. R. has been supporting Israel in the UN and the Kremlin and its agents throughout the world make political capital of it.

Yet, emigration of Russian Jews to Palestine was always strictly forbidden.

Finally, 3 weeks ago, the Soviet Union granted its first visa to Israel—to a one-legged war veteran who won the Order of Stalin. It took 2 years and the intercession of Israel's Minister to Moscow. Thousands of other Soviet Jews have not been so lucky.

When the Bolsheviks came to power, the Jews were the first to suffer, according to Gregor Aronson, a student of Soviet life whose 50-page documented pamphlet, Soviet Russia and the Jews, will soon be published by the American-Jewish League Against Communism, 220 West Forty-second Street.

SEMINARIES CLOSED

"With the Bolshevik revolution came the dictatorship of the Jewish Bolsheviks over Jewish communal life, through the 'Jewish Commissariat'," writes Mr. Aronson. "In a short time, it had liquidated the Jewish community organizations, forbidden Jewish religious schools and seminaries, communized or closed all Jewish societies.

"The commissariat then began a bitter struggle against Zionists, Jewish liberals and radicals, the Bund (Jewish trade-union Socialists), rabbis and all other religious officers. All but the official Communist publications were banned, of course."

In the 1930's, it became impossible to publish any books, even purely scientific works, in Yiddish, says Mr. Aronson.

With the 1934 purges, he relates, all Jews participating in Jewish communal life were removed from official posts and exiled or liquidated. The list was "very impressive," including the first Jewish Commissar, an old Bolshevik, Dimanstein, who for 20 years had been considered Stalin's eye in the Jewish group.

CAMPAIGNS SIMILAR

The 1934 purge furnished striking parallels to the current campaign in the official Soviet press and the Communist Party apparatus against homeless cosmopolitan intellectuals. Hundreds of Jewish historians, writers and artists, etc., were denounced as spies, diversionists, Fascists, Trotskyites and counter-revolutionists.

By 1940 Stalin had closed the local offices of the joint distribution committee, largest nongovernmental agency to aid distressed Jews outside America, and of ORT, oldest private Jewish organization devoted to vocational training.

Although JDC and ORT had performed valuable services in the reconstruction of Russian Jewish life after World War I, their responsible Russian representatives were arrested in 1939.

Palestine newspapers were barred from Russia. Rabbi Meyer Berlin, of Jerusalem, president of Mizrachi, religious wing of the World Zionist Organization, told this writer when he visited American in 1947.

BAN BIBLE FROM MAIL

Nor could Hebrew literature, including the Bible, be mailed direct to Soviet citizens. There were no Hebrew calendars in Russia.

The Warsaw papers of February 3, 1939, ran an extraordinary item. It reported the prosecution of a Pole who tried to smuggle Jewish prayer books, shawls, and other religious articles into the U. S. S. R.

How the Kremlin's historic crackdown on Zionism has been extended to the entire realm of Jewish life inside Russia will be told in tomorrow's story.

RUSSIA CRUSHING ALL JEWISH CULTURE

(By Frederick Woltman)

Judaism, in fact the entire communal life of Russia's 2,000,000 Jews, has virtually been strangled in the Soviet Union.

The Communist dictatorship, after obliterating Zionism in the early twenties, set a calculated and relentless course of stamping out all forms of Jewish life—cultural, social, educational, and religious—from one-sixth of the earth's surface.

In consequence of the persistent pressure of totalitarian conformism, U. S. S. R. Jews are now in an advanced stage of religious and cultural disintegration.

This conclusion appeared in the May Reporter, published by the American Jewish Committee, one of the foremost Jewish organizations in America. Among the leading Jewish laymen who serve as its officers are former Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, honorary vice president; and former Supreme Court Justice Joseph M. Proskauer, honorary president.

Thus the motherland of communism—held up to the world as the very model of racial equality, respecting the diverse nationalities within its own borders—has put Russia's Jews beyond the pale.

Probably no better authority could be found attesting to the virtual disappearance of Jewish life itself in the U. S. S. R. than B. Z. Goldberg, columnist on the Day, New York Jewish daily. Himself a Soviet sympathizer, Mr. Goldberg is sponsor of the School of Jewish Studies, designated as "an adjunct of the Communist Party" by the Department of Justice.

Returning after a 6 months' tour of the U. S. S. R., Mr. Goldberg, as far back as August 14, 1946, wrote in the Day:

"There are no Jewish districts in the cities and towns. There are no specifically Jewish occupations; there are no Jewish hospitals; no Jewish old folks' homes; no Jewish clubs; no Jewish parties; no Jewish philanthropies; no Jewish educational institutions."

QUARTER MILLION IN MOSCOW

Earlier, on March 23, 1946, Mr. Goldberg wrote:

"There are a quarter of a million Jews in Moscow, and perhaps more, but it is difficult to reach them.

"The Jews have no special social sphere, special charitable organizations, clubs, or those hundreds of other Jewish community societies which Jews of other countries have. * * * Jewish education has virtually disappeared."

There is "a total absence of any Jewish life in Russia," wrote Jacob Lestchinsky in the New Leader of March 8, 1947. He is an economist for the Institute of Jewish Affairs, World Jewish Congress, and staff writer on the New York Daily Forward, largest Jewish newspaper in the world.

The destruction of Jewish education in Russia, wrote Mr. Lestchinsky, "means that the whole future generation of Jews will have no idea of Judaism, Jewish history, Jewish life in Palestine and in other countries."

RELIGION OR ANATHEMA

The Jewish religion "has come under the same Soviet anathema as all other religions," according to the American Jewish Committee's May Reporter. The AJC's analysis was based on a series of studies by Dr. Nathan Reich, chairman of economics at Hunter College and former research head of the Joint Distribution Committee.

"In substance," declares the AJC, "all Yiddish cultural activities had to conform to the dominant Communist ideology. More recently, however, even this devitalized form of cultural expression has been reduced to the vanishing point."

NO MERE ACCIDENT

"The long-run pattern is disintegration of Jewish life," says the American Jewish Committee. It points out that Jewish "charity organizations are taken over, relief agencies are obstructed, Jewish writers pilloried, communal leaders persecuted."

"This policy is not accidental," continues the report, "Judaism has traditionally fought tyranny, oppression and authoritarianism.

"The voice of the prophets, continually raised in behalf of social justice and enlightenment, expresses the democratic ideal inherent in the Jewish faith. Its classic liberalism and devotion to freedom and human dignity challenge the totalitarian way of life.

"Soviet policy is utterly disastrous to communal Jewish life. Totalitarianism spells its doom."

The deadly effectiveness of the "long-run pattern" was described in the Daily Forward of March 23, 1948, by a Polish Zionist leader, Dr. Julius Margolin, who spent 5 years at hard labor in Soviet "corrective" camps between 1939 and 1946. Telling of the Russian Jewish families he met in these camps, Dr. Margolin wrote:

"I wept inwardly when I looked at the children of those who had once been the advance guard of the Jewish people.

"The children and grandchildren knew nothing about Palestine, did not know the Bible, had no idea of the culture or the names dear to every Jew—just as though they had come from another planet."

RUSSIA ISOLATES ITS JEWS FROM WORLD TO WIPE THEM OUT IN RED MELTING POT

(By Frederick Woltman)

The iron curtain has been clamped down on Russia's 2,000,000 Jews. By isolating them completely from their brethren throughout the world, the Soviet rulers aim, eventually, to force their total assimilation.

This is revealed graphically in the untold story of the Jewish Anti-Fascist Committee of Moscow and in the official Soviet press itself.

Five years ago, in a wartime bid for friendship, Josef Stalin sent two good-will ambassadors to the Jews of America.

They were present, in a 3-month tour, as outstanding Jewish artists of the Soviet Union—representatives of the new Jewish Anti-Fascist Committee, created by the Soviets to strengthen the bonds between the Jews of Russia and Jewish communities in other countries.

In a gesture of unity against the Nazi war machine, nearly 50,000 New Yorkers turned out to welcome them at the Polo Grounds.

As he rose to speak, the crowd cheered Itzik Feffer, poet of the U. S. S. R., loyal Bolshevik, wearer of the honor badge of the Soviet Union. In turn it acclaimed Solomon Michoels, director of the Moscow Jewish State Theater.

SUDDENLY LIQUIDATED

Leaders of American Jewry—Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver, the late Dr. Stephen S. Wise, Dr. Nahum Goldman, president of the World Jewish Congress, and others—put their blessings on the demonstration.

After the country-wide tour, enthusiastically received, Messrs. Feffer and Michoels returned to Russia and settled down to the business of the committee.

Suddenly 4 months ago, without explanation, the masters in the Kremlin liquidated the Jewish anti-Fascist committee.

They suppressed its newspaper, Einigkeit, the last Jewish-language publication left in the U. S. S. R. (Under the Czar, Yiddish papers were published as far back as 1903.)

And they arrested Itzik Feffer, its editor and outstanding poet of the Soviet Union. Solomon Michoels, meanwhile, had died.

To world Jewry, this crack-down on the one official Jewish movement in the homeland of communism had ominous significance.

It served notice that the Politburo's drive against Jewish intellectuals in the U. S. S. R. has been turned against all things Jewish, that not even loyal groups will be tolerated any longer.

For, ironically, the Jewish anti-Fascist committee, as it turned out, served only as a propaganda vehicle for Russian communism.

STALIN'S LIE

Stalin, with his Feffer-Michoels good-will tour sold a bill of goods to the many prominent Americans who lent their names to it—the late Wendell Willkie, Eddie Cantor, Herbert H. Lehman, and Albert Einstein.

A few months before, the American people had been shocked to learn of the execution by Stalin of the two Polish Jewish labor leaders, Heinrich Erlich and Victor Alter. After its disclosure by the World-Telegram, Stalin hoped to make America, especially the Jewish people, forget his blunder; and to forget how he lied when he assured Wendell Willkie that no harm would come to them—months after they had already been shot.

Now, with the committee dissolved, the Soviet press is out to cut off all contacts of Russia's Jews with the outside world.

Because the editors of the glossary for the new standard Soviet encyclopedia gave too much space to Jewish literature, Literary Gazette, which lays down the law for Soviet writers, accused them of abhorrent cosmopolitanism—in effect, disloyalty to communism.

"The authors," fumed the Gazette, "flout the party spirit and Soviet patriotism. They take the whole of Jewish literature without distinction as to country or state system and play into the hands of the enemies of the fatherland.

"NATIONALIST PALAVER

"They drag out the cosmopolitan, bourgeois, nationalist palaver of a supposedly world-wide Jewish literature. On their list, Soviet writers stand side by side with hardened modern businessmen of America, Palestine, and other countries.

"Their views are nothing else than slavish servility to hostile bourgeois nationalism."

Because he wrote about the Jewish religion, Moscow Evening Paper, official organ of the Communist Party, excoriated a Jewish writer. The headline: Insolent Preachings of a Kinless Cosmopolitan.

"The publishing house, Soviet Writer," began the diatribe, "which, as all well know has been activated by persons who had no kith or kin, by antipatriots Levins and Danins and their ilk, published in 1948 a book by Alexander Isbakh (nom de plume of Isaak Bakhrakh). * * *

"What does the author of this worthless book preach?

"First of all an ardent glorification of the Judaic religion.

"SATURATED WITH CULT

"The whole book is saturated with the religious cult. The first story is called 'God.' Tenderly genuflexing, Izbakh describes the service in the synagogue * * * the smallest details of Judaic ritual * * *.

"Izbakh openly conducts propaganda for Zionism, tells in detail about the Zionist organization which 'enjoyed great influence among the Jews of our city, * * * about 'kind uncles' who shipped Jews to Palestine; and he even reproduces the text of the Zionist hymn."

"Alexander Izbakh," the piece concludes, "wrote a loathsome book. And he was helped in publishing it by the cosmopolitan already exposed, F. Levin, who has no kith or kin."

RUSSIANS LEFT JEWS TO MERCY OF NAZI HORDES—DOUBLE-CROSSING POLICY LED TO WHOLESALE SLAUGHTER

(By Frederick Woltman)

To appease Hitler, the rulers of the U. S. S. R. double-crossed the Jews of Russia.

The Soviet Government during the Hitler-Stalin friendship pact deliberately kept its people in ignorance of the German dictator's campaign to exterminate the Jews.

Mention of the wholesale terror and atrocities perpetrated by the Nazis against the Jews of Germany and the occupied areas was forbidden in the official Soviet press.

The effect of this hush-hush policy was disaster to many thousands of loyal Jewish Soviet citizens.

RETURNED TO PERISH

Unaware of the mortal danger that faced them when the German hordes invaded their land, they remained in their home towns and perished. There were even many cases of Polish Jews who returned to Nazi-occupied Poland in 1940 after having escaped from the German onslaught to Soviet territory. Their fate, too, was death.

In their official reports from Russian areas to Berlin, German occupation authorities themselves expressed amazement to find Jewish captives so blissfully unaware of the Nazi program of extermination.

Some of these original documents, taken by a United States Army paratrooper from the Ministries of Propaganda and Eastern Areas, are now in possession of the Yiddish Scientific Institute, 535 West One Hundred and Twenty-third Street. They confirm the Kremlin's conspiracy of silence about the worst race slaughter in history, according to Dr. Solomon M. Schwarz, who made a study of them.

SUFFERING PLAYED DOWN

Dr. Schwarz, an authority on current economic and social problems in Russia and a researcher for leading Jewish organizations, said today that the Russian people were never told Hitlerism signified the complete extermination of the Jews.

"The Jews of Russia themselves did not know they were his main target," he said.

"Moreover," said Dr. Schwartz, "although the Jews suffered more than the rest of the Russians put together, the Soviet Government has always played down the sufferings of the Jews in the war."

"Opportunism, not anti-Semitism, motivated the Russian rulers," he said.

AFRAID OF PROPAGANDA

"They were afraid of Hitler's propaganda that the Communists were fighting for the Jews," he said, "so, instead of combating it, they kept silent, with terrible consequences to the Jews of Russia."

"Stalin and his officials did not worry about the fate of the Jews," wrote Gregor Aronson, another authority on the U. S. S. R., in his forthcoming documented pamphlet, Soviet Russia and the Jews. "They simply forgot about this problem."

He gave one possible explanation: Fear that the true story of the Nazi atrocities might weaken the popularity of the Hitler-Stalin pact among the Russian people.

With the pact, he wrote, the Soviet press abruptly stopped publishing belligerent articles against nazism and fascism.

A NEW DIRECTION

"Instead there was a gradual attempt to educate Soviet public opinion in a new direction. Yesterday's foes had become today's friends. * * * It became apparent that the Soviet press was absolutely forbidden to tell the truth about nazism, about German bestiality in Poland and about anti-Semitism which the Nazis were fostering everywhere they went."

He disputes the "myth that Stalin saved millions of Jews" which "the Communist propaganda machine has been extremely successful in propagating."

The Jews of Poland, the Baltic states and Bessarabia were saved for only a short time after the Red army moved in.

"Here were the remains of capitalism, of the bourgeoisie," wrote Mr. Aronson. "Here were not only well-dressed people, but people who had the effrontery to be Zionists, to worship in synagogues, to be proud of being Bundists (Socialists). In short, here were people who were free and independent and, therefore, 'enemies of the people' in Soviet Russia."

SUSPECTS LISTED

Lists of suspect Jews were drawn up, according to the author of the pamphlet published by the American-Jewish League Against Communism. Tens of thousands of NKVD (secret police) agents were sent in for the task of reconstructing Polish and Lithuanian Jews.

While no official figures exist, the Polish Government-in-exile estimated 600,000 Polish Jews were deported to the Soviet Union and Siberia.

Mr. Aronson reminds his readers of the historic speech by V. M. Molotov, then chairman of the Council of People's Commissars, on October 31, 1939. Russia's present Deputy Premier then said:

"One may accept or reject the ideology of Hitlerism as well as any other ideological system; that is a matter of political opinion."

REDS BAR JEWS FROM DIPLOMATIC AND PARTY JOBS

(By Frederick Woltman)

A quiet but systematic exclusion of Jews from the foreign office, diplomatic corps and Communist Party of the Soviet Union has been under way in the USSR for 10 years.

Today, as a result, the names of Jewish diplomats and party leaders, once numerous and prominent on the rosters of these all-important agencies of the Communist motherland, have virtually disappeared.

It is a program of freezing Russia's loyal Jews out of many facets of the nation's life, despite the myth created by the Communist propaganda machine that the USSR is the one country in the world which grants complete racial equality.

PROPAGANDA ATTACKS UNITED STATES

As government policy, the Soviet pattern has no parallel in America, which Communist propaganda nevertheless holds up to scorn as a haven of anti-Semitism.

It represents practices which Jewish, as well as many other religious groups in this country, have been gradually eradicating from the American scene as the very essence of anti-Semitism.

Meanwhile, only this week this trend in the USSR brought an expression of alarm from the American Jewish Congress, one of this country's most influential Jewish organizations, of which the late Dr. Stephen S. Wise was the founder and guiding spirit.

In an editorial, "Anti-Semitism and the U. S. S. R.," the current issue of Congress Weekly, official AJC organ, refers to "persistent reports of the purging of Jews from high office" in the Soviet Union.

"DISTURBING REPORTS

"Jewish opinion in this country and overseas," says the AJC publication, "has been disturbed by reports of officially approved anti-Semitic practices in the Soviet Union."

Apart from their elimination from foreign service and party posts, Jews are barred from the principal military academies of Moscow, according to reliable sources; and Jewish candidates are restricted in the law and medical schools of Kiev and Moscow.

The official Soviet press in reporting Red Army activities no longer mentions Jewish generals, although no less than 100 served during the war, say students of Soviet publications.

COLLEGE QUOTA SYSTEM

A quota system for Jewish students has been set up in schools of higher learning, declared the Daily Forward of New York, largest Jewish newspaper in the world, on January 9.

The quota system was ordered in 1939 in a secret directive of the central committee of the Russian Communist Party, said the Forward, citing an unidentified diplomatic source from the USSR.

In the political field, there is only one Jewish member left on the ruling Politburo. He is Lazar M. Kaganovitch, whose sister is said to be the wife of Premier Stalin.

NO JEWISH CANDIDATES

Last February, Moscow Evening Paper, central organ of the Moscow party, ran a list of 370 candidates for Communist regional and city committees in Moscow. Not a single name was Jewish, according to a former Soviet official, now an American citizen. In the 1930's the percentage would have run between 5 and 20.

In the foreign office, Maxim Litvinov and Solomon A. Losovsky, both vice commissars and the two most prominent Jews in the service, have been put into the discard. Ivan M. Maisky, former ambassador to Britain, who is half-Jewish, was retired to a professor's job in 1946.

"There are no Jews left of importance in the foreign office or diplomatic service," Dr. Solomon M. Schwaz, of 4 West One Hundred and Fifth Street, told the World-Telegram. "Except for a few old-time Bolsheviks on the central committee, they have been eliminated from all important party offices."

DOES RUSSIAN RESEARCH

An authority on economic and social problems in the U. S. S. R., Dr. Schwarz does research on Russia today for leading Jewish organizations. In this connection, he follows many current Soviet publications, including four daily newspapers.

"The policy of exclusion started in the late thirties, even before the Hitler-Stalin pact," he stated, "although the latter had a tremendous influence on the psychology of the central group of Russian bureaucrats."

He attributed the policy not so much to anti-Semitism as to "the bureaucratization of the state apparatus, which became more and more exclusive, finally eliminating minority elements."

"Now, for the first time," he added, "the Soviet government, which fought anti-Semitism for political reasons in the twenties, is openly fostering it against Jewish intellectuals.

"So you have a new combination today: Bureaucratic exclusion of Jews from the party and state offices and an anti-Semitic campaign to eliminate them from the ideological life of Russia."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS AT THIS POINT IN THE RECORD

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HELLER] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. HELLER. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Frederick Woltman, a distinguished writer for the New York World Telegram, is to be congratulated on his revealing and informative articles on what is going on behind the iron curtain in Russia. In the danger period through which we are now passing, the warning to which we have been alerted by the former Pulitzer prize winner, Mr. Woltman, is one for which the civilized world should be grateful.

What is going on in Russia is not new. Hitler, it is to be remembered, decreed the extermination of the Jewish people as a prelude to his attack on all Christianity. The Nazi anti-Christ moved with the sure and unerring instinct of a somnambulist when, of all his potential adversaries, he first singled out the Jew for attack.

Attacking the Jew has always been a wedge—military, diplomatic or ideological—driven into the ranks of Hitler's opponents prior to piecemeal subjugation and annihilation. Stalin is simply taking a leaf out of Mr. Hitler's book in his crazy drive for world domination.

Russia, in attacking the liberty of the Jew, simply denies the principle of religious liberty and affirms the right of government to control in the domain of conscience. It follows its pattern of being godless. Thus out of the ashes of a Second World War waged for the liberation of mankind appears again the vicious head of a dictator, Stalin, whose government carries out a worse form of despotism than existed under Hitlerism.

Today it is the Jew who is the particular victim—by tomorrow, when the floodtide arrives and the waves break higher and higher upon the shores, they may engulf all peoples. Establish the right of government to persecute a race, and you concede the right of government to persecute all races and all religions. Fasten this doctrine once upon the world, and we shall again retract the path of history, when the world yielded to government by brute force—when monsters occupied thrones and places of power—you usher in the day when the light of learning shall again be extinguished and the wailing of women and children shall take the place of happy laughter and of joyous song.

Mr. Speaker, I am not discussing today the fate of the Jews alone. I am discussing the dangers to humanity. I ask you this—shall the twin stars of liberty and equality once more be obscured by clouds of prejudice and hate?

At the time when the Nazis came to power and singled out the Jews for their first attacks, the democracies stood aside, invoking the political doctrine that there must be no interference in or notice taken of the purely internal affairs of a foreign state. Moral considerations had to make way for the rules of the imperialist game of blood and guile when great nations like the Czechs and the Austrians were to be handed over to the sadists of the Reich. We distrusted reports about the inhuman treatment meted out to Jews in the murder camps of Dachau and Oranienburg. We shrugged our shoulders as if it were no concern of ours what Streicher and Himmler did to a few thousand German citizens of the Jewish faith.

We were yet to learn, at an immense cost in tears and blood, that humanity is one, even as God is One, and that the martyred Jews were merely the forerunners on the road of sorrows of Poles and Albanians, of Czechs and Norwegians—and of American mothers and fathers.

We were yet to learn that the anti-Semitic justification of the Hitlerite's attitude to the Jews was but a trick to lull the Christian nation to sleep, to divide the democracies, to obscure the issues at stake, to befuddle people's minds in order that they might fall victim the easier to the Nazi plans of world conquest.

Man is one all over the earth. Hurt to one brother is hurt to all.

SENATE

FRIDAY, MAY 27, 1949

(Legislative day of Monday, May 23, 1949)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God of grace and glory, we bless Thee for the cleansing ministry of memory and for the rich heritage of noble deeds as our Nation, founded in Thy name, turns to its stirring past and to its warrior dead. Even as bugles are sounding to new struggles for liberty's cause, prepare our hearts and minds for the sacramental journey to quiet cities of the dead where, under their tents of green, sleep those whose lives were offered as freedom's shield. Save us from decorating tombs and at the same time desecrating the costly heritage which it takes graves to guarantee. We ask it in the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Florida; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments:

"Senate Memorial 614

"Memorial recommending to the Congress of the United States of America the carrying into effect of the administrative recommendations of the Hoover Commission

"To the Honorable Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress Assembled:

"We, your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Florida convened in regular session, respectfully represent that:

"Whereas during the last generation the enormous expenses of Federal governmental activities has created a condition of confusion and overlapping in the divisions of the administrative authority which has placed upon the President of these United States an ever increasing burden and has resulted in increased costs and inefficient administration; and

"Whereas pursuant to Public Law 162, enacted by the Eightieth Congress, there was created a commission known as the Hoover Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, which public law was on July 7, 1947, approved by the President of the United States, Harry S. Truman; and

"Whereas pursuant to said Public Law 162, there was appointed a bipartisan group of representatives and distinguished citizens of our country who had had experience in governmental affairs, which group made an exhaustive and unbiased examination into the administration of the agencies of the Federal Government; and

"Whereas the said Commission has filed a detailed report of its findings and its conclusions therefrom together with its recommendations covering the matter; and

"Whereas it appears to your memorialists that the said findings, conclusions, and recommendations constitute a cohesive and efficient program which will be of great benefit to the peoples of these United States: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the State of Florida (the house of representatives concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States be, and it hereby is, petitioned and requested by your memorialists to give due and favorable consideration to the recommendations of the Hoover Commission to the end that the said recommendations may be adopted by the Congress of these United States and the President of the United States be directed thereby to effectuate the provisions of such recommendations; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Florida be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit copies of this memorial to the President and clerk of the United States Senate, to the Speaker and Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each member of the Florida delegation in the Congress of the United States."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

"Joint Resolution 20

"Joint resolution requesting the Congress of the United States of America to enact legislation whereby lands acquired by the United States of America and not being used by said United States be offered for sale or exchange to former owners thereof and others

"Whereas the United States of America has acquired much land for defense purposes within the Territory of Hawaii immediately preceding and during World War II; and

"Whereas much of said acquired land is not being used by the United States of America since the cessation of hostilities; and

"Whereas many former owners of lands which were acquired by the United States Government are desirous of purchasing the same; and

"Whereas there are many other persons interested in the purchase of lands no longer being used by the said United States Government; and

"Whereas the private ownership of said lands would enable taxation thereof and be a source of revenue to the Territory of Hawaii: Now therefore "Be it enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii:

"SECTION 1. That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it is, hereby respectfully requested to enact legislation whereby privately owned lands acquired by the United States of America in the Territory of Hawaii and not being used by said United States be first offered for sale or exchange to former owners thereof.

"SEC. 2. That if the former owners of such lands acquired by the United States of America are not desirous of reacquiring said lands that other persons in the Territory of Hawaii be given the opportunity to acquire said lands either by purchase or exchange.

That duly certified copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America, to the Secretary of National Defense, to the Secretary of the Interior, and to the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii.

"SEC. 4. This resolution shall take effect upon its approval.

"Approved this 6th day of May A. D. 1949.

"Governor of the Territory of Hawaii."

RESOLUTIONS OF MISSISSIPPI BANKERS ASSOCIATION

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, the Mississippi Bankers Association, in official convention at Biloxi, Miss., on May 18, adopted three resolutions relating to national legislation worthy of the attention of each Member of this body. I present them for appropriate reference, and ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution on Senate bill 1775

Whereas this association is firmly of the opinion that the grant of any power of the Federal Reserve Board over nonmember banks of the Federal Reserve System is detrimental to the continuance of the dual banking system; and

Whereas Senate bill 1775, recently introduced in the United States Senate by Senator MAYBANK, would give the Federal Reserve Board the power to compel all FDIC-insured banks to carry additional reserves up to 4 percent of demand deposits and 1½ percent of time deposits with the Federal Reserve bank in their district whenever reserve requirements reach present statutory limits for member banks: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this association is opposed to Senate bill 1775, and that the secretary of this association is instructed to forward a copy of this resolution to each member of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency and to each of the Senators and Representatives from the State of Mississippi.

Resolution on Senate Joint Resolution 37

Whereas this association is firmly of the opinion that the authority to exercise control over consumer installment credit now held by the Federal Reserve Board as expressed in regulation W is no longer needful to the control of inflationary influences; and

Whereas Senate Joint Resolution 87 recently introduced in the United States Senate would give to the Federal Reserve Board a continuation of the authority and powers to control the terms of installment-consumer credit until June 30, 1951: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this association is opposed to Senate Joint Resolution 87, and the secretary of this association is instructed to send a copy of this resolution to each member of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency and to each of the Senators and Representatives from the State of Mississippi.

Resolution on reorganization of FDIC

Whereas this association is firmly and unanimously of the opinion that the continuance of the dual banking system is essential to the maintenance of free enterprise in this Nation; and

Whereas the continuance of the dual banking system in large measure depends upon the division of Federal bank supervision and examination among the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this association is firmly opposed to the passage of any legislation by Congress which would authorize or permit in any manner a consolidation of the powers now exercised by the FDIC, Comptroller of the Currency, and Federal Reserve Board, and that this association urges that the FDIC and Comptroller of the Currency be maintained on a parity with the Federal Reserve Board: Be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of this association be instructed to send a copy of this resolution to each member of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency and to each of the Senators and Representatives from the State of Mississippi.

RESOLUTIONS OF CATHOLIC WAR VETERANS OF WISCONSIN

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, on May 6 through May 8, the State department of the Catholic War Veterans of the United States met in Racine, Wis. At that time the Wisconsin department adopted certain resolutions which I believe will be of interest to my colleagues. I have selected those resolutions involving Federal jurisdiction, and I ask unanimous consent that the text of the resolutions, as forwarded to me by Henry Woyach, State adjutant of the CWV, be appropriately referred and printed at this point in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolutions will be received, appropriately referred, and printed in the RECORD.

To the Committee on Armed Services:

"Resolution on universal military training and peacetime conscription

"Whereas pressure groups are still active in espousing an un-American program of universal military training and peacetime conscription, and are using the unsettled world conditions as an immediate means to attain their end; and

"Whereas these pressure groups have caused confusion in the minds of the citizens of the United States by alining the cause of preparedness with their program of universal military training, and have imputed to those who oppose their program a lack of patriotism; and

"Whereas the Catholics of America have always demonstrated their patriotism and willingness to perform their duties as citizens in the protection of the principles of freedom and justice for which their country stands, and have fought valiantly against all inroads by a military caste; and

"Whereas the founders of our Government ordained in our Constitution a program by which the military training of our youths was adequately provided for in the State militia, and history has proven that we have been able, through the instruments of the State militia, to train our youth for the protection of our form of government without incurring the danger of militarism and the subjugation of our peoples to military rule; and

"Whereas the sole exception to the destructive working of the forces of the military caste in Europe has been in Switzerland, where a form of military training based upon a unit of government similar to that of our State exists, in which officers are promoted from the ranks, and which has proven that the military caste can be kept out of the control without sacrificing military preparedness: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we go on record as opposing legislation providing for universal military training, and ask the repeal of peacetime conscription laws; be it further

"Resolved, That we go on record as favoring a program to revitalize the State militia, and make proper provisions for stay-at-home training for our young men, and that a plan of training in our militia somewhat modeled after the Swiss plan, by which we recognize achievements and develop our officers from the ranks, be immediately adopted."

To the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service:

"Resolution on free mailing privileges for disabled veterans

"Whereas the disabled veterans confined to hospitals are in reality still in the service of their country, and are suffering the price of war; and

"Whereas the privilege of the use of mail without cost to them would encourage correspondence between themselves and their loved ones, and indicate to them that we have not forgotten the price that they paid for their service to our country: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Catholic War Veterans of the State of Wisconsin, in convention assembled at Racine, Wis., on this 7th day of May 1949, That we go on record as favoring legislation which would grant to hospitalized veterans the wartime free-mailing privilege."

To the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

"Resolution on socialized medicine

"Whereas socialized-medicine legislation is now before the Congress of the United States, which provides for a form of compulsory health insurance and State medical care; and

"Whereas it is an historical fact that where socialized medicine has been put into effect, it has failed to provide the peoples with the high standards of medical care which prevail in the United States under our system of free enterprise; and

"Whereas the enactment of such legislation would give evidence to our following the concepts of totalitarianism, as practiced in Europe, and permit the Government to make further inroads on the lives and liberties of our peoples: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Catholic War Veterans of the State of Wisconsin, in convention assembled at Racine, Wis., on this 7th day of May 1949, That we go on record as opposing the enactment of legislation providing for the socialization of medicine; be it further

"Resolved, That this resolution be presented to the Congressmen of our State and the Members of the United States Senate of the State of Wisconsin."

Ordered to lie on the table:

"Resolution on Federal education

"Whereas the Congress of the United States has legislation pending providing for Federal subsidy and control of education; and

"Whereas the centralization of control of education in the Federal Government has grave potential danger in that it will permit active organized minorities to propagandize our youth without giving to the people the opportunity to have these groups directly responsible to the people either at the ballot box or by local control; and

"Whereas under our Federal system of government, the matter of education is to be left to the sovereign States and be a democratic process over which the citizen and parent should have direct control: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Catholic War Veterans of the State of Wisconsin, in convention assembled at Racine, Wis., on this 7th day of May 1949, That we go on record as opposing the enactment into law of legislation now before the Congress providing for Federal aid and control of education."

RESOLUTIONS OF EASTERN COLLEGE YOUNG REPUBLICAN POLICY CONFERENCE

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD resolutions adopted by the Eastern College Young Republican Policy Conference, at Yale University, New Haven, Conn., April 30–May 1, 1949.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

POLICY RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY THE CONFERENCE, EASTERN COLLEGE YOUNG REPUBLICAN POLICY CONFERENCE, YALE UNIVERSITY, NEW HAVEN, CONN., APRIL 30–MAY 1, 1949

I. RESOLUTIONS FROM THE FLOOR

Whereas Ralph E. Becker has achieved a tremendous success in inculcating a sense of political responsibility on American campuses; and

Whereas he has given freely of his time and energy to this end at great personal sacrifice: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this conference accord to Ralph E. Becker the justly merited recognition of a difficult job well done.

II. RESOLUTION FROM THE FLOOR

Whereas Governor Alfred E. Driscoll of the State of New Jersey will participate in the only contested gubernatorial election in the United States during 1949; and

Whereas his extraordinary accomplishments in office represent the finest traditions of Republican statesmanship and administration: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we as Republicans from the various colleges assembled give public recognition to the progressive, liberal leadership that Governor Alfred E. Driscoll has provided to the Republican Party in New Jersey, in full realization that his continuation in office will serve as the initial impetus toward Republican victory in 1950 and 1952.

III. RESOLUTION FROM THE FLOOR

Whereas it is of the greatest importance for the Republican Party in this critical period of self-improvement, that the fullest cooperation of party organizations be achieved, and the closest kind of teamwork be effected; and

Whereas College Young Republicans can find the best expression of their ideas through full participation in local and State Young Republican organizations: Be it

Resolved, That the College Young Republican Clubs shall take every opportunity to integrate themselves with the local and State Young Republican organizations, and shall strive for the highest level of support of all their activities.

IV. RESOLUTION FROM THE FLOOR

Whereas the Communist Party and its numerous front organizations are constantly striving to indoctrinate the youth of our Nation with ideologies violently opposed to the basic principles of our free institutions: Be it so

Resolved, That this conference recommend the following: That the presidents of the various State Young Republican associations, acting through the chairman of the State campus activities, establish local regional committees for the purpose of disseminating information and better organizing a constructive, intelligent, and active resistance to this insidious element in our centers of national learning.

V. EDUCATION

Whereas there is a general inequality in educational opportunities among the several States: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Federal Government give assistance to equalize educational opportunities by means such as Senate bill 472, particularly the following program as taken from Senate bill 472 and added to it:

A. Federal aid to public elementary and secondary schools to establish a $50-per-pupil minimum in every school district in every State and thereby help States to raise teachers' salaries, get better teachers, and improve existing facilities.

B. Federal aid would be allocated on the basis of need determined by annual income payments to individuals within the States. Any in excess of $50 per pupil will be allocated by the States along with State funds.

C. An acceptance act must be passed by States including:

1. No discrimination in distribution of funds within the State.

2. States may not allocate Federal funds to parochial and sectarian schools in the same proportion as they allocate State funds.

3. A State must be spending 2½ percent of its annual income of over $160 per pupil on education to obtain the full amount of aid.

4. State educational authorities will submit audited reports of expenditures to the Federal Government Educational Commission each year.

5. State educational authorities can appeal to local Federal district courts if there are any complaints against allocation of the funds.

D. That the Federal Government be specifically prohibited from any interference in or control of selection of texts, teachers, buildings, etc.

E. The Federal Government shall assist the several States in providing a hot-lunch program for its schools by supplying to those States at a minimum cost surplus foods available to the Government.

VI. SOCIAL WELFARE

1. Whereas the Republican Party at its 1948 convention adopted a platform in which was contained a promise to combat discrimination, and whereas the Senate Republican leadership has indicated its desire to carry out these proposals: Be it

Resolved, That this conference record itself in favor of quick action for passage of antidiscrimination measures: Be it further

Resolved, That this conference declares itself opposed to discrimination of any kind based upon race, religion or color.

2. Be it resolved, That this conference go on record as being in opposition to the Truman plan of compulsory health insurance and in favor of the Taft-Smith-Donnell bill.

VII. LABOR

1. Whereas the public interest in the prohibition of crippling national strikes in critical industries overrides the interest of labor and management; and

Whereas the cooling-off period will serve to crystallize public opinion on the merits of the controversy; and

Whereas Congress, rather than the President, should decide in the last analysis whether compulsory arbitration should be required in the particular case: Be it

Resolved, That this body favors the retention of the 80-day injunction in national emergency strikes after which the matter may be referred to Congress for action if the matter is not solved.

2. Whereas we believe it is contrary to public policy for private labor leaders to decide who may or may not work in a particular industry or plant, or for those already employed to deny the right to work to others: Be it

Resolved, That this body favors the ban on the closed shop.

3. Be it resolved, That this body favors the joint congressional committee's recommendations that the mandatory injunction for secondary boycotts and secondary strikes be made discretionary.

4. Be it resolved, That this body favors the signing of an affidavit by management as well as by labor in which the signee swears he is not a member of an organization which stands for the forcible overthrow of the United States Government.

VIII. TAXES AND BUSINESS REGULATION

1. We believe that any sound fiscal structure of our Government must depend primarily on efficient administration; therefore, we heartily endorse the recommendation of the Hoover Commission to reduce expenditures by eliminating bureaucratic waste.

2. We believe that the dynamic productivity of our economy is dependent on the free flow of risk capital, and we therefore recommend that double taxation on corporations be eliminated.

3. We recommend giving the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice all the funds necessary to enforce existing antitrust legislation.

4. We believe that the several States have certain responsibilities to the people, and in order that they may assume those responsibilities, many of them now usurped by the Federal Government, we recommend that the Federal Government relinquish or reduce the following taxes, which are especially suited to collection by the States:

(a) Excise taxes, especially those on local telephone calls, intrastate electric energy, gasoline, and admissions.

(b) Amend inheritance and estate taxes so as to leave more room for the States.

5. We believe that one essential to the raising of the standard of living throughout the world, without a corresponding lowering of our own, is the expansion of trade. We, therefore, recommend that upon completion of the Marshall plan all efforts be made to encourage world trade by a full support and extension of the reciprocal-trade program.

6. We believe that it is the duty of a political party to educate the public, and we, therefore, recommend that the theory of the Federal tax structure and the distribution of its burdens be clearly defined and explained.

IX. PUBLIC POWER AND CONSERVATION

Be it resolved, That each river valley shall be examined separately, but each one to be taken as a single unit. A river valley development project shall be considered desirable if the total benefits from the installations are great enough to justify the required outlays for construction, operation, and maintenance of the project. Interest on investment, computed at the prevailing rate, shall be included in these cost figures.

If the project is considered desirable under the above provisions, and private capital is not available or not willing to do the job, then the local district, State, or States located in the project area may undertake the project. If the local district and the State or States refuse to assume the responsibility of the project, then the Federal Government may do the job.

Any project sponsored by the local districts, States, or Federal Government shall be set up as a self-amortizing project, to be paid for over a period of years determined prior to construction for each specific project.

2. Whereas the Republican Party has always supported the idea of conservation and flood control; and

Whereas the Government may, as an outgrowth of its powers under the regulation of interstate commerce clause (article I, section 8, clause 3) of the Constitution, undertake projects of this nature; and

Whereas the Government can undercut private producers when selling the incidental byproducts of these projects; and

Whereas governmental competition with private utilities is an encroachment upon their rights: Be it

Resolved, That the Government and the Republican Party, as a portion thereof, insure incorporation of private corporations in the sale of incidental byproducts of such projects, as a protection of their just rights under the Constitution of the United States.

X. HOUSING

The Republican Party, realizing the scarcity of housing and also realizing that private enterprise at this time is incapable of completely handling the housing needs of the people, stresses that a certain amount of Government action is needed to meet the situation.

We therefore favor the principle of temporary rent control—

(a) coupled with the principle of decontrol by local authorities where they have the approval of the governor of their State,

(b) and with due provision made for the allowance of rent increases when the landlord can show just cause.

The balance of the housing panel was not considered by the conference because of a vote to adjourn. The balance of the housing panel's report is printed below, without comment.

The Government has a responsibility to see that adequate housing is provided to the American people. This should be done by encouraging private enterprise where possible, but by direct action where necessary.

A. In order to provide adequate housing, production costs must be decreased and productivity increased. Two of the main barriers to cost reduction and increased production are the multiplicity of antiquated and conflicting local building codes and the restrictive practices of labor unions in the building field. We therefore urge Federal, State, and local governments to use all power in their jurisdiction to do away with these twin restrictions.

We specifically urge the enactment of a law that will enumerate and define as illegal all featherbedding practices in the building field.

B. We feel that the health and security of the Nation demands an adequte program of slum clearance. Since this is one field in which private enterprise cannot function, we feel that Government action is necessary.

However, slums are essentially a community problem, and local authorities are most competent to deal with it. Therefore, we urge that the actual slum-clearance programs be initiated by local communities, who shall have the option of doing the job themselves or hiring private contractors to do the job for them.

Since, however, local communities rarely have the resources to undertake projects of this sort, we urge that the Federal Government issue them loans and grants for this purpose.

In order that the housing projects erected in these slum-clearance programs be used for the purposes for which they were built, we urge that appropriate legal action be taken to insure that first preference for occupancy goes to families that are displaced when the slum dwellings are torn down, and that local authorities be required to set maximum income limits for admission to, and continued occupancy in, these projects, and that initial preference be given to families with the most urgent housing needs.

We further urge that local authorities be required not to discriminate against families whose incomes are derived in whole or in part from public assistance, but who are otherwise eligible for admission.

C. We favor the manipulation of the tax structure to encourage the building of low-cost rental housing.

D. In order to encourage the building of low-cost homes for that middle-income group that neither requires direct Government aid nor is able to pay the high housing prices now prevailing, we further favor the continuation and expansion of the principles of the FHA.

We also feel that FHA loans should be granted for the building of cooperative housing projects and for the manufacturing of prefabricated houses with due provision taken to insure that these latter meet approved housing standards.

E. Since most of these provisions enumerated above are contained in Senate bill 1070, we urge the enactment of this bill into law, and further urge that all provisions enumerated above that are not contained in S. 1070 be enacted into supplementary legislation.

SPIRITUAL INTERPRETATION OF PREAMBLE TO NORTH ATLANTIC PACT

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, our colleague the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], in conjunction with other Senators, has prepared a resolution. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to submit the resolution and speak on it not to exceed 5 minutes.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, under the agreement just entered into, I will have to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

Mr. WILEY. I ask to submit the resolution and speak on it, at the request of a brother who is sick, and has been sick for some 10 days.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Will not the Senator wait until other Senators have placed whatever routine matters they wish to place in the RECORD? Then the Senator can secure the floor and speak on the resolution.

Mr. WILEY. I will do so. I am very happy to have the Senator's suggestion.

BRITISH FILM QUOTAS

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a letter dated May 26, 1949, which was received by Mr. Eric Johnston, president, Motion Picture Association, from Acting Secretary of State James E. Webb, relative to the British film quotas, and a letter which my senior colleague [Mr. DOWNEY] and I sent to the Secretary of State last night relative to the British position.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. ERIC JOHNSTON,
President, Motion Picture Association, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. JOHNSTON: With your letter of March 31, 1949, you attached a memorandum relating to the British film quota and requesting that the State Department attempt to negotiate a reduction in this quota. As you know the Department took this matter up with British officials in early April. The Department has now received a response from the British Government to the protest made at that time. This response was substantially as follows:

The British Government states that the quota, which was fixed by Parliament, cannot be modified at the present time. It hopes, however, that as a result of the recent meetings in Washington between certain members of the American and British film industries and those scheduled to take place early in June an improvement in the relations between the two groups may be effected.

The British Government states that it feels that the quota in no way contravenes the General Trade Agreement or any other legal commitment, that the British Government had the same right to raise this quota as the United States or any other government would have to raise an import duty with respect to which it had made no commitments. It believes that the quota is consistent with and a necessary part of the British effort to build up production and trade looking toward an improvement in the British balance-of-trade situation. The British Government contends also that the quota is reasonable from the standpoint of British film production possibilities although the quota was not entirely filled with British features during the first year. This fact presumably accounted for the reduction in the quota from 45 percent to 40 percent for the second year. Finally the British Government expresses surprise that the setting up of the film quota should have been necessarily unexpected by the American film industry or interpreted as an act of bad faith as a consequence of any understanding between the industry and the British Government in connection with the film agreement of 1948.

I am sorry to have to transmit an unfavorable reply to you particularly in view of the efforts which have been made toward getting a modification of the quota. The Department is studying the response which the British Government has made in this case.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES E. WEBB,
Acting Secretary.

MAY 26, 1949.

Hon. DEAN ACHESON,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Following conversations which we have had this week with representatives of the Department of State, we should now like to make clear to you our deep concern with reference to the British Government's action in rejecting the State Department's protest against the highly restrictive quota which the British Government has directed against American motion pictures.

We regard the British reply as most unsatisfactory and clearly revealing the British intention not to abide by the spirit and purpose of solemn obligations under international agreements.

In our opinion, the British attitude has seriously damaged the cause of reciprocal trade to which this Government in the interest of promoting the flow of commerce and trade around the world has been so strongly committed. The very basis of the reciprocal principle is cooperation among nations. The British position on the new 40-percent film quota is singular evidence of a spirit of noncooperation. Reciprocity cannot continue on a one-sided basis.

The Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act is shortly coming before the Senate. We should think that the State Department would want to move immediately and energetically with the British Government to correct the aggravated situation created by the imposition of the film quota.

When the British Government, in its reply, speaks of the discussions between the leaders of the British and American film industries through the Anglo-American Film Advisory Council and suggests that action on the governmental level be held up pending the outcome of these talks, it is evading the issue of the quota.

Private industry can do nothing about the quota. This is a governmental matter. Only the British Government can provide relief from its onerous provisions. The British Government is responsible and no evasive words can shift that responsibility.

As the quota, in our judgment, threatens to undermine our Government's efforts in behalf of reciprocal trade, we request you send a formal protest to the British Government insisting that it negotiate with our Government to reduce or eliminate this quota.

Article IV of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, to which both countries are parties, specifically provides for such negotiations; these should commence without delay. Article IV is further reinforced by article XXII which requires the contracting parties to "accord sympathetic consideration to and shall afford adequate opportunity for consultation" with respect to matters, including quotas, affecting the operation of the agreement.

Inasmuch as we intend to go into the British film quota thoroughly when the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act is before the Senate, we desire your assurance at the earliest date that the Department of State has formally protested to the British Government requesting the opening of negotiations on the film quota.

Sincerely yours,

SHERIDAN DOWNEY.
WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND.

SPIRITUAL INTERPRETATION OF PREAMBLE TO NORTH ATLANTIC PACT

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, the future of the world, if it is to be a glorious future, lies in those nations which are spiritually wise. Man's wisdom is inadequate. The knowledge which stems from our Creator is necessary.

Paraphrasing the first Psalm, "Blessed is the nation that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful, but whose delight is in the law of the Lord; and in His law that nation finds guidance and direction."

Mr. President, we in the United States have always prized the religious heritage of our Nation. From the earliest times the founding fathers indicated their faith in divine providence and their reliance upon our Creator in meeting the problems which have confronted our Nation.

There will shortly be submitted to the Senate from the Foreign Relations Committee the North Atlantic Pact for ratification. In this connection, many of my colleagues and myself believe that the Senate, by a specific pronouncement, should indicate its interpretation of certain language in the preamble of the pact. That language reads:

They are determined to safeguard the freedom, common heritage, and civilization of their peoples.

The interpretation which we should like to give to this language is that our most precious heritage of all is "our continuing faith in our dependence upon Almighty God and His guidance in the affairs of men and nations."

On this floor we ask the question, "What constitutes a state?" The answer is, Men who their duties know and who do not consider religion as a mere opiate.

We have found that unfortunately too often in the work of the United Nations there has been omitted any religious reference whatsoever. Prayers have been omitted and other spiritual evidences have been intentionally ignored.

At this time, therefore, in order to correct this condition insofar as the North Atlantic Treaty is concerned, I am submitting on behalf of my colleague the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], who is necessarily absent today, and on behalf of 14 other Senators and myself, a resolution for interpretation of the language of the preamble.

If the Senator from New Jersey were present he would be doing what I am now doing. This resolution is submitted on behalf of the Senator from New Jersey, who is necessarily absent, and he is joined by the following Senators: The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL], the Senator from Montana [Mr. ECTON], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS], and myself.

The resolution is brief. I shall read it:

Whereas the history of these United States clearly records the faith of our forefathers in Almighty God from the days of the earliest colonization and during all the crises of their early struggles; and

Whereas these United States and the other nations parties to the North Atlantic Treaty are believers in the guidance of the Creator in the affairs of men: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States interprets the language of the preamble to the North Atlantic Treaty, reading as follows: "They are determined to safeguard the freedom, common heritage and civilization of their peoples," to include this Nation's most precious heritage—our continuing faith in our dependence upon Almighty God and His guidance in the affairs of men and nations.

The resolution (S. Res. 121) was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that immediately following these remarks there be printed in the RECORD the text of a splendid statement which our colleague the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] has prepared in connection with this important matter.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICA'S HERITAGE

(Statement by Senator SMITH of New Jersey)

Mr. President, it is a matter of great regret to me that because of my recent operation I cannot be on the floor of the Senate to introduce in person the resolution proposed by myself and other colleagues, which is the subject of this supporting statement.

It is my purpose in the near future, when the North Atlantic Treaty comes before the Senate for ratification, to express at that time my reasons in full for supporting that treaty and my conviction that it is in accord with the traditional foreign policy of the United States. It is a treaty of mutual help, and also a treaty of mutual defense against the dangers of armed aggression. Its purpose is to protect the security of the participants.

THE "COLD WAR"

But, Mr. President, the physical security which we seek to attain by the ratification of the North Atlantic Treaty is not enough of itself to secure to our Nation and to the world that over-all peace which is the aim and purpose of all our steps toward international collaboration. And this is because the big "cold war" that is going on today is not a war of armed aggression, but rather a war to capture men's minds. It is a war of ideas let loose upon the world, the seeds of which find fertile ground where there is division, chaos, and despair, and where the hope and vision of peoples shattered by the war has been lost, and where men and women are groping for light in the darkness. It is all too true today, as it has been through all of our history, that without vision a nation perishes.

AMERICA'S HERITAGE

Our America has emerged in the very recent history of the world as a very high mountain from which the vast promise of human liberty can be seen. Man has striven to attain this mountain top through the centuries. We and our forebears have struggled for a thousand years in order that the individual human personality may be released from the shackles of superimposed, despotic power, and may be free to express his inventive inspirations and the deepest spiritual yearnings of his soul. That struggle has brought America to her true greatness.

This conception of freedom and liberty, of which our America is a symbol to the world, springs fundamentally from our earliest religious conceptions. We owe to the Jewish people the concept of one God, as distinguished from many gods, who cares for His chosen people and guides their destinies. This concept was expanded by the teachings of Christ to include all mankind and to recognize the fatherhood of God, the Great Shepherd. The new Christian interpretation dramatized the priceless value of each individual by the analogy of the importance of each little lamb in the flock. Down through the Christian era these conceptions were the foundations upon which our principles of human liberty arose.

THE MATERIALISTIC ATHEISM OF COMMUNISM

Mr. President, you and I have accepted these principles as part of our traditional thinking, and seldom have we individually considered it necessary to pay any price for these great birthrights that the blood, sweat, and tears of our forefathers have given to us. But today we find ourselves suddenly confronted with a new idea, a new religion, a new cause that has apparently so gripped the imagination of masses of people throughout the world that it threatens the continuing faith of mankind in these great truths which we have always taken for granted.

Let me high-light briefly this new philosophy which has not only defined religion as an opiate of the people but has gone so far as to deny the sacredness of the individual and his liberties, and has insisted that the state is everything. This new materialistic, atheistic, communistic faith is based on the teachings of Karl Marx. Karl Marx said: "The democratic concept of man is false because it is Christian. The democratic concept holds that each man has a value as a sovereign human being. This is the illusion, dream, and postulate of Christianity."

And we find a similar teaching by Hitler who learned much from Marx, and whose words ring out in the same note: "To the Christian doctrine of the infinite significance of the individual human soul, I oppose with icy clarity the saving doctrine of nothingness and insignificance of the individual human being." And, alas, we know how Hitler carried out this atheistic concept in his ruthless persecution and destruction of the Jewish people in Germany.

It has been argued recently that the Communist high command in Moscow, having found that the Russian people as a whole are inherently religious and have resisted the destruction of their faith, has eased up on its antireligious policy, and is permitting the orthodox church in Russia to continue its activities.

In this connection, I have just had called to my attention a book published recently which recites the experiences of its author with the Communist antireligious philosophy. This book is vouched for by Monsignor Fulton J. Sheen, as is the author, who remains anonymous for obvious reasons. In his foreword, Monsignor Sheen makes this statement:

"This book will disabuse the minds of those who, fed on propaganda, believe that Russia is friendly to religion. True, there has been a recognition of the orthodox church in Moscow, but only at the price of political subservience to the foreign policy of the Communists. This new church, the stooge of communism, has been neatly called by one of the European newspapers a religious cominform in the service of atheistic imperialism. Along with this recognition of a politically dominated church is to be noted an intensification of Soviet antireligious propaganda. On June 29, 1948, Pravda declared that the central committee of the Communist Party favored the intensification of atheistic activity. On June 15, 1948, Bolshevik warned that 'all sorts of prejudices and circumstances have revived among the people as a result of neglect of propaganda.' On June 11, 1948, the Soviet teachers' newspaper, Uchitelskaya Gazeta, contained directions telling the teachers of the U. S. S. R. how atheistic propaganda was to be carried on in the schools. No protest was ever lodged against this decision by the politically dominated Orthodox Church of Russia."

The author of this book, the title of which is "God's Underground," states on page 6 and the following pages that he had kept in close touch with developments inside the Marxist state (meaning Russia) right up to the outbreak of the war in 1939. To quote the author:

"Atheism was the very foundation of that state.

"Shortly after the revolution, one of its leaders, V. Steponov, the translator of Marx, laid down the line that was to be followed for over a quarter of a century of Russian history: 'We need a resolute struggle against the priest, whether he be called the pastor, the abbot, the rabbi, the patriarch, the mullah, or the Pope. At a certain time this struggle must be transformed into the struggle against God, whether he be called Jehovah, Jesus, Buddha, or Allah.'"

The author points out that immediately within Russia today, and within practically all of the so-called satellite countries there is an enormous population of sincere, despairing human beings who firmly believe in their respective religions, and especially, of course, the Greek Orthodox people of Russia and the Slavic countries, and the Roman Catholic populations of such countries as Poland, Czechoslovakia, and Hungary.

AMERICA'S SPIRITUAL HISTORY

Mr. President, I have emphasized the importance of this materialistic atheism to the Communist cause because of the important place it holds in the war of ideas, that struggle to capture men's minds which is the heart of the so-called cold war.

In sharp contrast with this deadly, devastating concept of life, which is nurtured, as I said above, in atmospheres of division, despair, chaos, and disruption, and the promise of better things through the all-powerful state, I desire vividly to portray the history of our own America, and how, from the time of its first discovery, those who have come to our shores in quest of the freedoms they so much yearned for looked to the guidance of Almighty God in what they were trying to do.

Christopher Columbus was clear about the spiritual faith which underlay his voyage, and said his discovery of the New World was made with "thanks to the Eternal God, our Lord, who gives to all those who walk His way victory over things which seem impossible."

The colonists left their homes in Europe because they sought spiritual freedom and wanted to establish a country with faith in God as its foundation.

The Pilgrims dedicated their voyage "to the glory of God and the advancement of the Christian faith."

The closing words of the Declaration of Independence are in this significant and challenging language: "And for the support of this Declaration with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor."

Throughout our history, in times of national crises America through its leaders has turned to God for His answer and His plan. There was a crisis in 1787 when the Constitutional Convention was in session. It had been difficult enough to get the delegates from the various States to come, and when they came it was hard to lift them above their rivalries and dissensions. At the end of July, it still looked as if division might win and union might lose, and that was the moment when Benjamin Franklin made his now famous address to George Washington, the president of the Convention. Franklin was then 81 years of age, and certainly as we read his biography we cannot accuse him of being overwhelmed by any particular brand of piety. Nevertheless, these are the actual words he used on this occasion:

"The small progress we have made, after 4 or 5 weeks' close attendance and continual reasonings with each other, our different sentiments on almost every question, several of the last producing as many noes as ayes, is, methinks, a melancholy proof of the imperfection of the human understanding. We indeed seem to feel our own want of political wisdom, since we have been running all about in search of it. We have gone back to ancient history for models of government, and examining the different forms of those republics, which, having been formed with the seeds of their own dissolution, now no longer exist; and we have viewed modern states all around Europe, but find none of their constitutions suitable to our circumstance.

"In this situation of this assembly, groping as it were in the dark to find political strength, and scarce able to distinguish it when presented to us, how has it happened, sir, that we have not hitherto once thought of humbly applying to the Father of Lights to illuminate our understandings?

"In the beginning of the contests with Britain, when we were sensible of danger, we had daily prayers in this room for divine protection. Our prayers, sir, were heard; and they were graciously answered. * * *

"I have lived, sir, a long time, and the longer I live the more convincing proofs I see of this truth; that God governs in the affairs of men. And if a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without His notice, is it probable that an empire can rise without His aid? I * * * believe that without His concurring aid we shall succeed in this political building no better than the builders of Babel. We shall be divided by our little partial local interests; our projects will be confounded; and we ourselves shall become a reproach and byword down to future ages. And, what is worse, mankind may hereafter, from this unfortunate instance, despair of establishing governments by human wisdom and leave it to chance, war, and conquest."

History indicates that this was a turning point in the Convention. When the delegates returned after a short recess they gave to the Colonies and to the world the document that is the keystone of America's political survival and greatness.

And let us hear from other great American leaders. George Washington in his farewell address, so familiar to all of us here in the Senate, because of our tradition of reading it annually, used this language: "Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. * * * A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. * * * And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that a national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle."

Our coins say: "In God we trust." The Great Seal of the United States shows the pyramid of human society with the eye of God at the top; and beneath that symbol is written, The New Order of the Ages. This symbol and this motto appear today on the reverse side of our $1 bills.

Later in our history we recall Lincoln's words when he said that if this Nation is to have a "rebirth of freedom," it must be "under God."

And again let me quote Lincoln:

"We have been recipients of the choicest bounties of heaven; we have been preserved these many years in peace and prosperity; we have grown in number, wealth, and power as no other nation has ever grown. But we have forgotten God. We have forgotten the gracious hand which preserved us in peace and multiplied and enriched and strengthened us, and we have vainly imagined, in the deceitfulness of our hearts, that all these blessings were produced by some superior wisdom and virtue of our own. Intoxicated with unbroken success, we have become too self-sufficient to feel the necessity of redeeming and preserving grace, too proud to pray to the God who made us."

Let me emphasize again that these were the words of our own beloved Abraham Lincoln.

THE CENTRAL ISSUE IN THE COLD WAR

The liberties and the freedoms, then, for which our America stands are the fine flowering of the deepest spiritual convictions of which the human race has been capable. But we must immediately recognize that if those flowerings are cut off from their roots they might readily be the cause of our swift downfall, and the loss of all these most precious heritages. Liberty without control may become license; and, in the name of freedom, people who are undisciplined may demand for themselves those things which inevitably will come into conflict with the demands of others, and which may well bring about the necessity for harsh laws in order that man may be able to survive.

William Penn put the central problem of government in a nutshell and described the dilemma of us moderns as clearly as if he had been living today, when he said: "Men must either be governed by God or they will be ruled by tyrants." And, following directly after Penn's thought, a French philosopher, Jules Lachelier, said a few years ago that, to him, the only conceivable form of democracy is theocracy, and that of the very kind which Penn had established in the forests of Pennsylvania; adding:

"As soon as men refuse to be ruled directly by God they condemn themselves to be ruled directly by man; and if they decline to receive from God the leading principles of their moral and social conduct they are bound to accept them from the king or from the state or from their race or from their own social class."

We have only to study the events of the most recent years in Germany with the totalitarian state there, and now in Russia, with its totalitarian state, to see the contrast between what has happened, and this simple principle so vividly stated by William Penn. The popular conception of what has happened in the totalitarian countries is that the supremacy of the state has been adopted in place of the freedom of the individual.

But let me add that supremacy of the state could not arise unless the supremacy of God had first declined. We shall have a God, or we shall have a human leader deified by himself or his followers; as witness Hitler and now Stalin. And let me say at this point that there is here a distinct warning to us in the United States today, where some are seeking more and more to curtail individual liberties and to bring the state more and more into the center of the picture to control our activities in the name of the welfare of all of us. America may well be on the way to losing its God unless we keep reminding ourselves of those foundations upon which our freedoms are built.

Mr. President, I was profoundly disturbed because it was not possible during the deliberations which led to the creation of the United Nations Charter to make common acknowledgment of the direction of a divine power which guides the destinies of men in their search for peace. One can understand the difficulty of finding a common meeting ground for the expression of religious faith in such a great and diverse body as the UN. But I hope and pray that it may be possible for the new UN structure in New York to have a nonsectarian chapel for the use of all those members of that great body who feel they do have a need for reliance upon a higher power.

But, be that as it may, certainly the nations who are participants in the North Atlantic Treaty are all nations whose history and development have recognized the power of Almighty God in the affairs of men, and it does seem to me and to others to whom I have talked on this vitally important subject that somewhere in the proceedings of the ratification of this important document we should find a place for the recognition of our fundamental faith.

THE RATIFICATION OF THE NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY

In this connection, a few weeks ago I received from the pastor of one of our Washington churches a suggestion which presented this same thought to me. The Reverend L. Ralph Tabor of the Luther Place Memorial Church of Washington wrote to me under date of April 25, as follows:

"I address this letter to you as a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to request that you consider a matter of primary importance relating to the North Atlantic Treaty proposed for ratification by the Senate of the United States of America.

"The statements in the text of the proposed treaty are succinct and clear; but it has seemed to me and others with whom I have discussed the treaty, that there is a notable omission. That omission is any reference to the name of God.

"I am convinced that faith in God is historically implicit in the phrase of the preamble, 'common heritage and civilization of their peoples.' This faith requires explicit statement. It is a component part of the testimony to be borne by the proposed treaty before the nations of the world.

"I respectfully request that, if your conscience and your judgment permit, you seek to provide for an unashamed recognition of divine providence in the affairs of men and nations by an amendment to the preamble of the proposed North Atlantic Treaty.

"Such an objective could be secured by the insertion of two words, 'under God,' following the word 'desire' in the first sentence of the preamble. The sentence would then read: "The parties to this treaty reaffirm their faith in the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and their desire, under God, to live in peace with all peoples and governments.'

"The addition of these two words will bear witness to a religious motive which must be in the minds of the signatory governments. If such a motive is absent the making of a treaty is vain. If this motive is indeed present, let it be stated openly.

"The words 'under God' have an honored place in the heritage of the United States of America and in the heritage of the other signatory nations. However, they are not extracted from an official document and therefore require no political explanation in the association of other governments.

"It is my opinion that by proposing such an amendment you will serve our Nation faithfully. The open recognition of God is wholly consistent with the procedures of the United States Senate.

"I shall appreciate your consideration of this suggestion."

And just a few days ago I had called to my attention that during the debate in the Canadian House of Commons on Friday, April 29, 1949, in Ottawa, when that body approved the North Atlantic Treaty, a member of the Parliament made the following striking statement:

"Finally, sir, I regret that we have not seen fit in either of the resolutions bringing this pact before the house to give expression to our need for divine guidance in finding a way through the rocky shoals of a very difficult world situation.

"I have on several occasions pointed out to the house that Canada is a Christian nation. We have constantly expressed our belief in the Christian way of life. Every day this House of Commons is opened with a fervent prayer to Almighty God to guide us in our deliberations. And yet, in one of the most important documents to be brought before the House of Commons at any session, this Atlantic Pact, we have not seen fit to include in the resolution an expression, in so many words, of our need for divine guidance to help us find our way through a difficult situation."

I took up with some of my colleagues the challenge of Dr. Tabor's letter, and it was agreed by all of us that the point emphasized by the writer was a matter of first importance. But we felt it might be inappropriate at this time actually to seek to amend the treaty itself, as suggested by Dr. Tabor, or to pass a reservation which might be construed to require the formal approval of all the other signatory nations. Our purpose, obviously, should not be to tell the other nations of the world what their position should be in a matter of this kind, but, rather, it seemed to us that the proper course would be to indicate to the other participants our own convictions, based on our own traditions and history.

It is with this point of view that my colleagues and I present to the Senate of the United States at this time of the ratification of the North Atlantic Treaty a resolution of interpretation of what we in the Senate of the United States believe to be our American spiritual heritage.

CONCLUSION—A RESOLUTION OF INTERPRETATION

Mr. President, in developing this sharp cleavage between the materialistic atheism of communism and our American faith in the guiding hand of God in our destiny, it is not my purpose to criticize, in any way, those who participated in the drafting of the United Nations Charter or more recently in the drafting of the North Atlantic Treaty. I can well appreciate what their problems were and we are all grateful for a fine job well executed. Nor do I wish to pose as preaching to my senatorial colleagues on the subject of America's faith. But, Mr. President, I am so firmly convinced that the people of these United States would want someone to say at this critical time what my colleagues and I have tried to say in this simple resolution that I feel it is a privilege to point out this great historical fact in our American history.

The cold war is on, no matter what the outcome of the present Paris talks. And that cold war is presenting a clear-cut issue. Shall the individual man, who throughout history has been seeking to find the reality of God, hereafter be ruthlessly denied that quest? Or should that infinitely precious individual be told in no uncertain terms that our America believes that there is a guiding purpose in this great universe; and that America is confident that the guiding hand of God, which led America through the darkest days of her history, will continue to guide our destiny and the destiny of all mankind?

If we give the right answer, Mr. President, then from America's mountain top of liberty under God, the despairing people of the world may be able to see the long way ahead to the true brotherhood of mankind—"one far-off divine event to which the whole creation moves."

Mr. President, we respectfully submit for appropriate reference our Senate resolution which reads as follows:

"Whereas the history of these United States clearly records the faith of our forefathers in Almighty God from the days of the earliest colonization and during all the crises of their early struggles; and

"Whereas these United States and the other nations parties to the North Atlantic Treaty are believers in the guidance of the Creator in the affairs of men: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Senate of the United States interprets the language of the preamble to the North Atlantic Treaty, reading as follows: 'They are determined to safeguard the freedom, common heritage and civilization of their peoples,' to include this nation's most precious heritage—our continuing faith in our dependence upon Almighty God and His guidance in the affairs of men and nations."

COMMENDATION OF PHILIP MURRAY AND THE CIO FOR OUSTING COMMUNISTS

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I rise to express commendation and my personnel appreciation of the sound action taken by Philip Murray and the executive committee of the CIO in recent days. I refer to the forthright drive to rid that great labor organization of the Communist taint in the leadership of some of its unions.

The CIO has never been on my side. In fact, it has been one of the most active of my political opponents.

For my part, I have found fault with the CIO many times. For years I have demanded that it purge itself of the Communist-card carriers and the fellow travelers who have had such great influence in its activities. And for years, because of this demand, some members of the CIO have called me a wide variety of names—none of them pleasant.

I have also criticized the rule-or-ruin tactics of the CIO, its insistence that public officials take care of it first, ahead of the welfare of the public as a whole. I shall always object to such tactics, whether they come from labor, industry, politics, or from any other source, including the Federal bureaucrats.

But when Philip Murray and his CIO do a fine and courageous thing, even though belatedly, I feel that they should be commended and congratulated.

I hesitated for several days to make this statement on the floor of the Senate. I believed it should and would come from the CIO's friends in the Senate, those who have backed its activities, and who in turn have been the beneficiaries of PAC votes.

But, oddly enough, none of them has come forward on this floor to laud that organization for its increasingly successful fight to get rid of the foul fumes of communism which pervade some sections of the CIO.

Since I believe that public recognition is due Mr. Murray and the CIO, I have decided that I should call attention to their action, rather than let it go unnoted on the floor of the United States Senate.

I want to remind the Senate that Philip Murray, national president of the CIO and of its steelworkers, is a Pennsylvanian. He is a former coal miner of my State; in fact, he worked in the coal mines of Washington County, my own home county. He rose to his present eminence by hard work and full use of his intelligence. He is and always has been strongly anti-Communist.

What is new and important is that finally he has been able to rally enough other leaders of his organization to make the drive which is presently succeeding.

Mr. President, I commend to the United States Senate the action of the CIO board, which met here in Washington the other day and made clear that it will no longer tolerate Communists and Communist sympathizers in high places in that labor organization.

It is appropriate also at this time to suggest similar action by those bureaucrats who, willfully or otherwise, have closed their eyes to the dangers of communism in this country. I recommend that they face this situation with vigor and courage, and take such steps as are necessary to drive out every Communist who holds a place in our Government.

ADMINISTRATION OF CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2663) to provide for the administration of the Central Intelligence Agency, established pursuant to section 102, National Security Act of 1947, and for other purposes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I should like to make a brief explanation of the pending bill. It is similar to one which was passed unanimously by the Senate at the last session. The bill presently before us is a House bill which passed the House of Representatives, as I recall, by a large favorable vote; I think there were only about four votes in opposition to it. It is called the Central Intelligence Agency bill.

Although this measure may be looked upon by some persons as of little importance, in my opinion, for whatever it may be worth, it is one of the most important pieces of legislation which we shall consider in this Congress. I say that for the reason that it is important that our military authorities be completely advised in regard to what is taking place in the world, so that they may constantly make an estimation of the probable dangers which eventually may confront our country, and of how they may deal with them.

The bill relates entirely to matters external to the United States; it has nothing to do with internal America. It relates to the gathering of facts and information beyond the borders of the United States. It has no application to the domestic scene in any manner, shape, or form.

The work to which the bill relates is dangerous work. In many localities where representatives of our Government may go in quest of information, if they are detected they are likely to pay for their adventuresome spirit with their very lives. I should say it is not improbable—and I am measuring my words—that many men working for our government already have paid the supreme sacrifice in attempting to gather information of a nature vital to our country. Particularly when our soldiers are stationed abroad in such goodly numbers in many countries, and where there are at times the possibilities of conflict, it is important that a variety of useful information be assembled, in case of need—not that we are going to use it to make war, but so that we may use it in the event war is made upon us, so as to save the lives of citizens of our country and even the lives of civilians who are not citizens of our country, but who might be in the path of a conflict in which our own troops might eventually be engaged.

This bill has the approval of the State Department and of the Department of Justice. Its enactment is desired by the military department of the Government. The bill has been referred to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee of this body, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] who is in charge of certain phases of activity in our domestic scene upon which this measure might impinge slightly; to wit, the admission to this country of an immigrant who would give us valuable information. The Senator from Nevada has read the bill and has given his written approval of it.

I am available now to answer questions, insofar as I can, by Senators who are not members of the committee, who perhaps would like to have some information which I have not covered in this brief summary. I have no desire to take up the time of the Senate in an extensive analysis of the bill, but I think I have indicated enough to show what its general purport is and how important it might be in conceivable circumstances to the safety and the lives of people in and out of uniform in our own country.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Maryland whether the program is to supplant the present counterintelligence work of the Army or is to complement it?

Mr. TYDINGS. I may say the bill changes nothing that is not now in existence insofar as foreign intelligence is concerned It is already provided in the Unification Act that there shall be a central intelligence agency charged with these duties, but unfortunately the provision is couched in a generality, and this bill is to give the agency, inasmuch as we have it anyway, the mechanics so it can be more effective than it could otherwise be.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I may say to my distinguished colleague that I am in full sympathy with the purpose of the bill and shall gladly support it.

Mr. TYDINGS. I say in conclusion, we must always know the size of the armies of other countries, we must know what their air potential is, what inventions they are pursuing, what the people in a possible enemy country are likely to think or are likely to do, or how they are likely to react to a given circumstance. We cannot merely take the word always of the governmental authorities who are for the moment in charge of those countries. We have to know the real truth, and it is in order to do this that we have such an agency as this, that the logistics that flow from this information may be always available in the time of emergency.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. May we safely conclude that in the days prior to World War II America did not benefit from what the Senator and his associates have endeavored to work out and are now presenting to us?

Mr. TYDINGS. I should say that prior to our entry into World War II we were babes in the woods to a large extent in this field. If we had had then what we have now it is possible there might have been a different result at Pearl Harbor. The information was there, and we should have had men operating within the group who were adverse and hostile to the United States, working with them, so they could have told us what were the intentions of those people who were under our flag, ostensible citizens, but who were plotting, in liaison perhaps with possible enemies, to destroy the United States of America. I thank the Senator for his interruption.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. As one who followed the bill very closely last year and was in charge of it, there is but one thought on which I think the Senator might enlarge somewhat. This intelligence agency does no work at all within the continental United States, except to assimilate information it receives elsewhere. Is not that correct?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is completely correct. There is not a single agent of this intelligence agency working within the United States in any form of espionage, directly or indirectly. It is purely and completely and wholly and singly in the external or foreign field. It has no connection with the FBI, it is not under the FBI, it does not do the same kind of work as the FBI. Its sole effort is outside the United States.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Am I correct in saying that it does not interfere with the FBI in any way, shape, or manner?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct. It does not interfere with it in the slightest degree. Are there any other questions? If not, I do not desire to hold the floor, but I hope the debate will not be too greatly extended, that we may draw the issue, whatever it is, and have the Senate on record, and I hope, with overwhelming support.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. LANGER and Mr. NEELY addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. I thank the Senator, but I want the floor in my own time.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I have listened with considerable interest to the Senator from Maryland. I agree with him that in general the purposes of the bill are fine. I agree with him that it is one of the most important bills ever to come upon the Senate floor. But I totally disagree with him as to two aspects of the bill. With respect to those aspects of the bill, I propose to offer amendments in the hope that we may be able to make the bill what it ought to be.

First of all, I call attention of the entire Senate to the report of the House committee, which, at page 6 thereof, says:

> The report does not contain a full and detailed explanation of all of the provisions of the proposed legislation in view of the fact that much of such information is of a highly confidential nature.

So, Mr. President, we have a situation in America wherein the House of Representatives passed a bill without having full and detailed information of the provisions of the bill, without, as a matter of fact, knowing exactly what the purpose of the bill was, and so far as I know——

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I decline to yield at this time. A little bit later, I shall be glad to yield to the Senator. I say that so far as I know, it is the first time in the history either of the House or of the Senate that any report contained the statement:

> The report does not contain a full and detailed explanation of all of the provisions of the proposed legislation in view of the fact that much of such information is of highly confidential nature.

Mr. President, I ask every Senator, if he will, to compare the House report with the Senate report. It will be found that they are almost identical, with the exception of the three or four lines which I have just quoted. In other words, in the House there were a few Representatives who objected to the bill. By reading the proceedings of the House yesterday it became apparent that those Representatives resented the fact that they were asked to vote for a bill which had not been reported to them in its entirety, a bill as to which there was some secret, confidential information they had not obtained. The result was that when the Senate Committee on Armed Services submitted its report those four lines were eliminated.

What did Representative CELLER, chairman of the House Committee on the Judiciary, say about the bill? I read from the debate in the House, on March 7, at page 1985, Mr. CELLER'S statement:

> Mr. Speaker, although I do not like the hush-hush business surrounding this bill, I shall not oppose it. Certainly if the members of the Armed Forces Committee can hear the detailed information to support this bill, why cannot our entire membership? Are they the Brahmins and we the untouchables? Secrecy is the answer. What is secret about the membership of an entire committee hearing the lurid reasons? In Washington three men can keep a secret if two men die. It is like the old lady who said, "I can keep a secret but the people I tell it to, cannot."
> I must counter the remarks of the previous speaker. We have in the bill this very significant language "for permanent residence without regard to their inadmissibility under the immigration or any other laws or regulations."
> In the first place, if there had not been a closed rule, I would have made the point of order to strike out this provision because it is exclusively within the province of the Committee on the Judiciary and is not the business of the Committee on Armed Services. The Committee on Armed Services has nothing to do with immigration.

I may say, Mr. President, that I have here a copy of the La Follette-Monroney Act. That legislation was passed 2 years ago in order to give to each committee jurisdiction of certain specific matters. On page 17 of the La Follette-Monroney Act it is provided that the Committee on the Judiciary shall have exclusive jurisdiction of immigration and naturalization. The distinguished Senator from Maryland knew that, so he talked to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary. The distinguished Senator from Maryland is one of the ablest Senators upon the floor. He made a long and extended argument in favor of the La Follette-Monroney bill. He knew that the chairman of the Armed Services Committee had no authority to write any law affecting immigration and had no authority to pass upon such a matter. It was a matter which was entirely and solely, first of all, within the jurisdiction of the Subcommittee on Immigration and Naturalization of the Judiciary Committee. Up to the present time the bill has not been referred to the Judiciary Committee.

I want to make it clear how differently committees function. In the Eightieth Congress the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service unanimously reported a simple bill providing for reduced postage rates to Germany, Austria, Italy, and some other European countries. When we got through with it it was decided that the bill should go to the Committee on Foreign Relations. That committee, in turn, had to pass upon the proposition as to whether there was anything in the matter of lowering postage rates to some of the foreign nations which would be detrimental to our foreign relations.

We have in the pending bill a brand-new section, one which, according to my recollection, was not in the bill of last year. It is exclusively, fully, and completely within the jurisdiction of the Immigration and Naturalization Subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, and at no time was it ever referred to that committee.

Representative CELLER continued with his speech as follows:

> Now this provision I have read throws out the window, at the discretion of the Director mentioned in this bill and the Attorney General, all the legislative immigration restrictions that we have built up over the years.

Representative CELLER was absolutely correct. He said, further:

> It throws them to the winds, and if the Attorney General and the Director wish to admit Fascists, Communists, Hitler sadists, morons, moral perverts, syphilitics, or lepers, they can do it. I think the House ought to know what it is legislating about, and I think, in a measure, this indicates how the cold war is unhinging the nerves of some of our high military authorities. The secrecy, especially the brand we are treated to, is ridiculous. Secondly these immigration privileges are badly conceived. If you want to give this authority to the military, all right, but I think we should know what we are doing and whither we are going. The military is not infallible. Witness the situation of the charges levied by the military intelligence against one Agnes Smedley recently, that she was a Communist, or a Russian spy, and instead of retracting when they found they were in error, they simply admitted a faux pas. The military is indeed not infallible. On the question of immigation they are given carte blanche, willy-nilly, to admit 100 persons under this particular provision which should be stricken from the bill or, if it is not stricken, certain safeguards should have been added.
> I have spoken briefly to advise the Armed Forces Committee to stick to its own knitting.

When immigration is involved, let the proper committee be consulted—the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. President, I wish to invite attention to section 8 of the bill. I may add that I shall offer an amendment to strike out section 8. That section reads as follows:

SEC. 8. Whenever the Director and the Attorney General shall determine that the entry of a particular alien into the United States for permanent residence is in the interest of national security on essentials to the furtherance of the national intelligence mission, such alien and his immediate family shall be given entry into the United States for permanent residence without regard to their inadmissibility under the immigration or any other laws and regulations, or to the failure to comply with such laws and regulations pertaining to admissibility: Provided, That the number of aliens and members of their immediate families entering the United States under the authority of this section shall in no case exceed 100 persons in any 1 fiscal year.

What is the situation, Mr. President? Two men, the Attorney General and the Director, can set aside the entire immigration laws of the United States. Already there are five or six million aliens in this country. Already the Attorney General and the Director of Immigration have advised our committee that they cannot find them all in order to get rid of them. We have had an example of kings, queens, princes, counts, dukes, and what not, chasing over to England, and of the existence of governments in exile there. Already some have chased over to the United States. King Peter of Yugoslavia was riding in Connecticut, going at the rate of 70 or 80 miles an hour, when he was arrested for speeding and endangering the lives of persons along the highway. He claimed immunity. He said, "I cannot be arrested." The police of the State of Connecticut released him. A few nights later he was in a place in New York called the Stork Club. I discussed this incident with my distinguished friend from Maryland. He said he was thoroughly familiar with the Stork Club. It so happens that I am not familiar with it. I do not know how large a place it is, but it seems they have certain favorite tables in that club. At any event, when the ex-King of Yugoslavia dropped in, he was not given the best table. He was given what he thought was a second-best table. So he started a rumpus, and, as I remember, the police were sent for and the manager of the Stork Club stood firm and said he would not take the table away from the people who occupied it and give it to the so-called King of Yugoslavia.

There is nothing to prevent all the ex-crown princes and persons of so-called blue blood or royal blood, with whose names I am not familiar, but whom my distinguished friend from Maryland knows by heart—he knows some of them by their first names, I found in discussing the matter with him—there is nothing to prevent their coming in at any time. They do not have to enter as other individuals do. All they have to do is to get the Attorney General and the Director to say, "Come on in." They do not have to obey a single law which we have passed in order to protect citizens of the United States.

When this bill was before the House, another Representative had much to say about it. Before I take that up, I repeat what I have already said, I intend to offer an amendment to eliminate section 8. If the proponents of the bill want section 8, if they want to have the power to let a hundred people come into the United States, and if they are people who for national security reasons should come in, I have not any objection to having a separate bill introduced and presented to the proper committee, and with proper safeguards we can see that people who will help the United States can get into our country in 24 hours, as the report made by the Committee on Armed Services says they want the law to be.

Why stick in this section 8? It is stuck into a bill where it has absolutely no right to be. It is stuck into a bill which deals with contracts, into a bill which provides that the Director of the Central Intelligence Agency may make contracts involving up to $1,000, that he can buy things in an emergency, and all that sort of thing. Then out of a clear sky they stick in section 8, providing that 100 people may be admitted without regard to the immigration laws of our country.

Mr. President, both the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts and the distinguished Senator from Maryland a few moments ago stated that this bill had nothing to do with the internal affairs of this country at all, that it dealt only with territory outside the continental United States. Let me read subdivision (B) on page 7:

While in the continental United States on leave, the service of any officer or employee shall be available for work or duties in the agency or elsewhere, but the time of such work or duties shall not be counted as leave.

The Senator from Maryland says that what is provided for in the bill is being done now, that the Navy and the Army and other branches of our Government have thousands of these people. I have not the least objection to taking all of them and putting them under the Central Intelligence. I have not any objection at all to that being done, and the cost to our taxpayers being reduced, provided the people do their work outside this country, just as was alleged a few moments ago by the distinguished Senator from Maryland is being done.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I share the Senator's concern, and I am glad he wants to be reassured in reference to this matter. But let me correct the Senator. I never said that the Army and the Navy had thousands of men engaged in this service. So far as I know, the Army and Navy have no one engaged in it.

To come down to the point the Senator raises as to paragraph (B) on page 7, that will apply only when the agents are brought back for reorientation, to be told what their new tasks shall be. While they are on leave they may be called to Washington and assigned to a new task, given training in the new task, and then sent out. They do no work in the United States, but they do have to come back to be indoctrinated into all the difficulties which will confront them when they take up a new task. That is the only purpose.

I know the Senator may not agree with me, but he knows I would not deceive him in any sense of the word as to this bill or any other matter, and I can assure him, after thorough investigation, that none of these agents will work at all in the United States. The only time they will do anything here is when they come, either on leave to visit their families, or come back, if they are changing their stations, to be reindoctrinated.

Mr. LANGER. The Senator said that the Army and the Navy had none of these people here, yet he told us not half an hour ago that all the work that is contemplated by the bill is being performed here now by agencies. What are those agencies?

Mr. TYDINGS. It is being performed by the Central Intelligence Agency, which is a branch of the National Security Council. It works under the National Security Council. It advises the President.

Mr. LANGER. The Senator knows that we have a Naval Intelligence, and he knows we have a Military Intelligence.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will permit me to complete my answer, he has gotten the two things confused, understandably. Army Intelligence deals primarily with logistics. We know how large a certain army is, we know how large a certain navy is, we know how many airplanes another country has, we know how many trucks he has. Naval Intelligence deals primarily with navies, or the logistics of moving or dealing with armaments in the hands of a possible enemy. The organization we are here concerned with is primarily established to find out what the intention of a possible enemy is, what he is doing, what he is concealing, his movements, what the people in the foreign country think and assorted information of tremendous value on a military plane.

There are none of these agents who work in the United States. I hope the Senator will take my word for that. We went into that subject very thoroughly in the committee, and all this work is completely outside the United States, except for the indoctrination which must take place whenever an agent is sent into a new field.

Let us suppose an agent is being sent to Country X. He has to be told what he is to do in Country X, he has to be told what the customs are in Country X, he has to be furnished with a variety of information so that he can work there unobserved and obtain information, and, to tell the truth, so that he will not be killed, as in some cases men have been killed. The reason why there must be secrecy is that we do not want men to lose their lives, and I regret to tell the Senator from North Dakota that some men have already lost their lives in this service. I make that admission

Mr. TYDINGS. I should say that prior to our entry into World War II we were babes in the woods to a large extent in this field. If we had had then what we have now it is possible there might have been a different result at Pearl Harbor. The information was there, and we should have had men operating within the group who were adverse and hostile to the United States, working with them, so they could have told us what were the intentions of those people who were under our flag, ostensible citizens, but who were plotting, in liaison perhaps with possible enemies, to destroy the United States of America. I thank the Senator for his interruption.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. As one who followed the bill very closely last year and was in charge of it, there is but one thought on which I think the Senator might enlarge somewhat. This intelligence agency does no work at all within the continental United States, except to assimilate information it receives elsewhere. Is not that correct?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is completely correct. There is not a single agent of this intelligence agency working within the United States in any form of espionage, directly or indirectly. It is purely and completely and wholly and singly in the external or foreign field. It has no connection with the FBI, it is not under the FBI, it does not do the same kind of work as the FBI. Its sole effort is outside the United States.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Am I correct in saying that it does not interfere with the FBI in any way, shape, or manner?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct. It does not interfere with it in the slightest degree. Are there any other questions? If not, I do not desire to hold the floor, but I hope the debate will not be too greatly extended, that we may draw the issue, whatever it is, and have the Senate on record, and I hope, with overwhelming support.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. LANGER and Mr. NEELY addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. I thank the Senator, but I want the floor in my own time.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I have listened with considerable interest to the Senator from Maryland. I agree with him that in general the purposes of the bill are fine. I agree with him that it is one of the most important bills ever to come upon the Senate floor. But I totally disagree with him as to two aspects of the bill. With respect to those aspects of the bill, I propose to offer amendments in the hope that we may be able to make the bill what it ought to be.

First of all, I call attention of the entire Senate to the report of the House committee, which, at page 6 thereof, says:

> The report does not contain a full and detailed explanation of all of the provisions of the proposed legislation in view of the fact that much of such information is of a highly confidential nature.

So, Mr. President, we have a situation in America wherein the House of Representatives passed a bill without having full and detailed information of the provisions of the bill, without, as a matter of fact, knowing exactly what the purpose of the bill was, and so far as I know——

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I decline to yield at this time. A little bit later, I shall be glad to yield to the Senator. I say that so far as I know, it is the first time in the history either of the House or of the Senate that any report contained the statement:

> The report does not contain a full and detailed explanation of all of the provisions of the proposed legislation in view of the fact that much of such information is of highly confidential nature.

Mr. President, I ask every Senator, if he will, to compare the House report with the Senate report. It will be found that they are almost identical, with the exception of the three or four lines which I have just quoted. In other words, in the House there were a few Representatives who objected to the bill. By reading the proceedings of the House yesterday it became apparent that those Representatives resented the fact that they were asked to vote for a bill which had not been reported to them in its entirety, a bill as to which there was some secret, confidential information they had not obtained. The result was that when the Senate Committee on Armed Services submitted its report those four lines were eliminated.

What did Representative CELLER, chairman of the House Committee on the Judiciary, say about the bill? I read from the debate in the House, on March 7, at page 1985, Mr. CELLER's statement:

> Mr. Speaker, although I do not like the hush-hush business surrounding this bill, I shall not oppose it. The reason why there must be secrecy is that we do not want men to lose their lives, and I regret to tell the Senator from North Dakota that some men have already lost their lives in this service. I make that admission regretfully, and we want to make provision so that others will not lose their lives.

When men undertake this character of work, they take it on the understanding that they may not come back, because in some cases when they are caught they are put to death. We might as well say that on the floor of the Senate. We are dealing with the lives of men who are in this service, and for that reason there has to be a great deal of secrecy thrown around the work.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I repeat what I said at the beginning of my argument, that I agree fully, completely, entirely, absolutely, and wholly with the desire to protect the lives of these people working for our Government. I believe in national security.

Let me read what Mr. SASSCER said about the purposes of the bill in the House of Representatives. I read from his statement:

> Mr. Speaker, H. R. 2663 is a bill to provide for the administration of the Central Intelligence Agency. There have been some misconceptions as to its purposes. For this reason, I would like to make certain broad statements concerning the bill and its purposes before discussing it in detail.
> The Central Intelligence Agency was established as a successor to the Central Intelligence Group, under the provisions of section 102 of the National Security Act of 1947.

Now I wish to ask the Senator from Maryland a question.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator allow me to make an observation before he asks the question?

Mr. LANGER. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to tell the Senator that the Senator from Maryland was fortunate enough to have a boyhood friend who had charge of some of the most difficult and important work undertaken in this line of activity during the war, and I have perhaps heard more of the ramifications of this service than any other man in Congress, because I had the good fortune to sit at the feet of this particular individual, and I have heard him tell many things that happened, and the difficulties encountered. So I have a little more concern than I would have, had it not been for this personal experience. It is only out of abundant caution, knowing how a little thing disclosed may put an agent in a very difficult place, that the Senator from Maryland has striven to be cautious in what he has said.

Let me say a further word. Suppose a man is a citizen of country A. Suppose he comes to our representative and says, "I am a citizen of country A, but country A does not like your country. I do like your country. I should like to work for your country." Suppose that man is working in some official capacity in country A, and we employ him, and get information we may desire If that man were to be detected he must know in advance that he can come to the United States, that he can escape, and secure asylum here. Otherwise, on his return, he will be confronted with the general laws of the country from which he came, and that means his death. So if we are going to ask people to assume this dangerous work we will have to give them the assurance that we will stand behind them in the event they are threatened with the loss of their lives if they are detected while working for our country.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I agree with every single word the Senator from Maryland has said. I repeat, however, that I agree also with the distinguished chairman of the House Committee on the Judiciary, Representative CELLER, when he said, on the question of immigration:

> On the question of immigration they are given carte blanche, willy-nilly, to admit 100 persons under this particular provision, which should be stricken from the bill, or, if it is not stricken, certain safeguards should have been added.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me say to the Senator from North Dakota that no one can come into this country under the bill except with the approval of the Attorney General, who already has supervision over the immigration laws, and of the Secretary of Defense. A person cannot wait to secure a visa when his life is threatened. A man who undertakes this dangerous work wants to know that he can come into the United States on 2 minutes' notice; that he will be identified and given asylum here. He will not undertake such work unless he knows that, if he is detected and wants to flee for his life, there is an open door into this country for which he is risking his life to serve, and that he will not have to go through the red tape of securing a visa. Let me tell the Senator that every government on earth makes provision of this sort for men who work in the secret service.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, again I assure and reassure and re-reassure the distinguished Senator from Maryland that he and I are in complete agreement on the matter of allowing entry to whatever number of persons may be necessary; but, nevertheless, I agree with the distinguished chairman of the House Committee on the Judiciary when he says:

> This particular provision * * * should be stricken from the bill, or, if it is not stricken, certain safeguards should have been added.

Section 8 does not protect the people of the United States from having a group of Communists or Fascists, or whatever they may be, come into this country. Section 8, which in a proviso permits the entry of 100 persons a year, provides:

> Whenever the Director and the Attorney General shall determine that the entry of a particular alien into the United States for permanent residence is in the interest of national security or essential to the furtherance of the national intelligence mission, such alien and his immediate family shall be given entry into the United States for permanent residence without regard to their inadmissibility under the immigration or any other laws and regulations, or to the failure to comply with such laws and regulations pertaining to admissibility.

Mr. President, I submit there is nothing in the bill which gives us any jurisdiction over these persons after they get into our country. When they come here they are on an absolute par with the distinguished Senator from Maryland. They can go wherever they want to go, they can do what they want to do. There is no provision that they must make reports. There is no provision for following them up. That is why I say that, agreeing as I do with the distinguished Senator from Maryland, I believe we should place some safeguards in section 8, or else keep such aliens out of the country.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. In the first place, I believe the Senator has covered a great deal more territory than the facts in the bill warrant. For example King Peter, and all the princes and dukes and other royalty who visited the United States during the war came in under State Department visas, and they have nothing more to do with this bill than I have to do with the Chinese Communist Government at this moment. They all came to the United States when there was no Central Intelligence Agency in existence. They all came here under State Department visas. We are not in this bill dealing with any such attention. Anything of that nature is as far from this debate as Siam is from North Dakota.

Let us get down to the meat in the coconut. What greater safeguard would the Senator want than to require that the Director of the Central Intelligence Agency, who is charged with the security of the country so far as intelligence is concerned, and is certainly not going to permit anyone to come into the United States who might endeavor to overthrow the Government, and the Attorney General of the United States, who is charged with enforcing the law, shall make the determination? Would the Senator from North Dakota feel more assured if we put the President in it, too?

Mr. LANGER. I might say to my distinguished friend from Maryland that if we had another Attorney General like Harry Daugherty, I would not want him to pass on anything, even a dog, coming into this country. We have had one Attorney General of that kind.

Mr. TYDINGS. We have had Senators and Representatives and even Presidents who have not been all we would hope they should be.

Mr. LANGER. We have immigration laws to take care of the admission of aliens. Under our immigration laws safeguards can be placed around the entry of these 100 people. I want the immigration laws of the country enforced, or, if necessary, so changed as to provide safeguards when these hundred individuals the Senator wants excepted, are admitted into the country.

Mr. TYDINGS. How would the Senator do that?

Mr. LANGER. I would have the section submitted to the Committee on the Judiciary and to the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Mr. TYDINGS. How would he get the people into the United States immediately and at the same time throw the safeguards he desires around them and around us?

Mr. LANGER. I would do exactly as the chairman of the House Committee on the Judiciary, Representative CELLER, said we should do. He suggested the way safeguards should be placed around us.

Mr. TYDINGS. What are they?

Mr. LANGER. I would call in the Director of Immigration and Naturalization and ask him what is necessary to be done in order to carry out the committee's recommendations. The Armed Services Committee did not do that. There are no safeguards contained in the bill at present.

Mr. TYDINGS. Oh, yes; the Attorney General and the man who is charged with securing the information to safeguard the United States of America certainly are not going to let come into the country someone who wants to do harm to the United States of America. The trouble is that Mr. CELLER is looking upon this sort of activity practiced by all governments as if it were a regular, open, above-board, orthodox, give-and-take procedure. This is one of the things which ought not to be practiced by any government, but which every government has to practice in self-defense. It is somewhat like war. No country ought to make war. A war is the most outrageous crime human beings have ever put their hands to. But so long as people are threatening to make war on us we have to be ready to protect ourselves. That is the philosophy of the bill. The lives of our men overseas in many cases depend on this bill having enough elasticity to it so it can serve the purposes of the security of the country without any undue delay. It may be the Senator's son or my son or someone else's son who is dependent upon the information which the Central Intelligence Agency will assemble for the protection of our troops.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, we are not at war at the present time. Representative CELLER yields to no man in patriotism. I have known "MANNY" CELLER for over 30 years. For 24 years he has been a Member of the House. For 24 years he has been a member of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House. When "MANNY" CELLER says there ought to be safeguards placed in the law before 100 aliens are permitted to come into the country, I take the word of Representative CELLER, the chairman of the House Committee on the Judiciary. He is an outstanding patriot. He is an honest gentleman, with a world of experience.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to say that I have served with Mr. CELLER in the House of Representatives. I became a Member of the House of Representatives and Mr. CELLER became a Member of the House of Representatives in 1922. My relations with him and affection for him and respect for him are of the very highest order. What I say is said with no reflection on him. But when the bill passed the House, after Mr. CELLER had made his speech, from which the Senator has read in part, the vote was 348 in favor of the bill and only 4 against the bill. Let me say to the Senator that if this had been an immigration matter per se Mr. CELLER would have secured 348 votes in support of his position, and only 4 votes would have been against his position. This is not an immigration matter. It has nothing to do with immigration per se. This is asylum for military agents who are working for the United States, and who are faced with death if they are caught. We simply tell them in advance that if the Director who employs them, and the Attorney General, who is detached from the Director, approves it, if they are detected and their lives are in danger they may come into the United States. After that, they are just the same as anyone else. They have no immunities or privileges.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, the argument that this bill has nothing to do with immigration is the sheerest nonsense. Again I quote Mr. CELLER. At the end of his talk he said:

> I have spoken briefly to advise the Armed Services Committee to stick to its own knitting. When immigration is involved, let the proper committee be consulted—the Judiciary Committee.

That is the statement of a man who has been a Member of the House for 24 years.

Mr. President, I invite attention to page 7 of the bill, subparagraph (B), which reads as follows:

> While in the continental United States on leave, the service of any officer or employee shall be available for work or duties in the Agency or elsewhere, but the time of such work or duties shall not be counted as leave.

The services of such officer or employee are not to be used in this country. This bill deals with activities outside continental United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. LANGER. If that be true, would the distinguished Senator be willing to accept an amendment in line 4 on page 7, after the word "shall" to insert the word "not" and strike out lines 6 and 7?

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator read the language as it would then be?

Mr. LANGER. It would read:

> While in the continental United States on leave, the service of any officer or employee shall not be available for work or duties in the agency or elsewhere.

Mr. TYDINGS. I would accept that amendment with one qualification, and that is that they can receive training here. If the Senator will exclude training, if his language is broad enough so that training and indoctrination are not included as work, I shall be delighted to accept the amendment. I do not want to tie up the situation so that when they get to the United States they cannot receive any training or indoctrination. They are working then, but they are not working on espionage in the United States.

Mr. LANGER. Again I agree with the Senator from Maryland 100 percent.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let us adopt language which will accomplish that purpose.

Mr. LANGER. I have the amendment prepared.

Mr. TYDINGS. Work would include work in the department. If the Senator wants to say that they cannot work in the United States or receive pay while they are here for indoctrination and training, his language is most unfortunate. I am with the Senator in theory, but his language goes further than his theory.

Mr. LANGER. I am taking the language in the bill. With my amendment, the language would read:

> While in the continental United States on leave, the service of any officer or employee shall not be available for work or duties in the agency or elsewhere.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me show the Senator, in good faith, what he would do by his amendment.

Mr. LANGER. I am not through.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will lay aside his pride of authorship for a moment, and listen to me——

Mr. LANGER. I am delighted to listen to the distinguished Senator as long as he wishes to talk.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not wish to take long. However, the language would read as follows:

> While in the continental United States on leave, the service of any officer or employee shall not be available for work or duties in the agency or elsewhere.

He could not even go to the central agency and work there. Does the Senator want to say that?

Mr. LANGER. I would not object to his working in the agency, but I do not want him to work elsewhere.

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask the Senator to read his own amendment, and see if it does not exclude work in the agency.

Mr. LANGER. The distinguished Senator just said——

Mr. TYDINGS. I cannot accept an amendment of that kind.

Mr. LANGER. Suppose the distinguished Senator drafts the amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the language is all right as it is. I am not complaining.

Mr. LANGER. The Senator said he would accept the word "not."

Mr. TYDINGS. I said that I would accept the word "not" assuming that it allowed the man to work in the agency, and allowed him to be trained in the United States.

Mr. LANGER. We can meet that difficulty very simply by adding the word "except."

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator read the language as it would be with the word "except"?

Mr. LANGER. It would then read:

> While in the continental United States on leave, the service of any officer or employee shall not be available for work or duties except in the agency, and for training.

Mr. TYDINGS. How about orientation schools?

Mr. LANGER. Let us put that in.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will complete his amendment, I am willing to accept an amendment which is concise and clear, and which does not include the orthodox work of these agents within the continental United States. In my opinion, that is what the present language does.

Mr. LANGER. Let me say to my distinguished friend that no doubt he is familiar with the fact that in the debates in the House the claim was made that when these men come back they will be used to break up labor unions. I do not believe it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me tell the Senator how that foolish idea originated. Let us assume that a laboring man is a part of this organization, and that we want to send him over to Germany, for example. Let us assume that he speaks German. He may never have had any affiliation with a labor union. He is going to associate with men both in and out of labor unions. Obviously he would have to be sent where labor unions meet and discuss questions, and where they act, so that he could get the feel of the situation, and so that he would not be like a sore thumb sticking out when he reached a foreign country. He would need to know the techniques, the lingo, the habits, and so forth, of those who are labor-union men, in order that he might be an efficient, undisclosed officer gathering information, without any idea on the part of those who would give it, that the information was being imparted to our Government.

Mr. LANGER. I fully agree with what the distinguished Senator says.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not believe that the Senator can improve very much on the bill. The very questions which he has brought up have been thoroughly canvassed and considered by the committee. The exact language which we have accepted has been adopted as safeguarding our internal affairs while giving the widest scope to the agents in the external field.

Mr. LANGER. The Senator may be correct——

Mr. TYDINGS. We have been all over this question in great detail. Witnesses have been interrogated at great length. The hearings have been extensive. We have considered every phase of the problem. The Senator has not heard the testimony. Neither has Mr. CELLER. He did not attend one of the hearings—and properly so, because he was not supposed to attend them.

Mr. LANGER. The Senator's argument sounds very strange to me, after the experiences which I have had on committees. For example, take the pay bill. After more than a month of hearings last year, although the distinguished Senator from Maryland and some of his colleagues were not present at the hearings, they offered amendment after amendment. What is there sacred about this bill, that it cannot be amended? It is the same as any other bill. I think I have a good amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me say to my friend from North Dakota that there is a great deal of difference between amending a pay bill and dealing with an extremely sensitive and secretive function of Government which has to do with the lives of men, not in wartime, but in peacetime. When we find that a man who has undertaken this work has not returned, but has been destroyed, we are not very anxious to do something which will result in the destruction of the next man who comes along to carry on the task from that point.

I have already said much more in this debate than should be disclosed. I think this debate is unfortunate. I think it ought to be in executive session. I think there is a great deal of meat in what must be said here in order to get the bill through, which is serving those who are not friends of the United States. This is one time when there ought to be secrecy. The whole atmosphere of the bill is secrecy. I regret that in answer to the Senator's questions I have been forced to disclose as much as I have disclosed. We are not serving the United States or the brave men who are going forth under all kinds of difficulties to help to place the security of our Nation beyond peradventure.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I yield to no man, including the distinguished Senator from Maryland, in patriotism. However, I will never stand on this floor with a report and say, "We are not reporting everything to this body which should be reported. We are keeping some of it back." The time has not yet come, during a period when we are not at war, when we cannot discuss any bill upon the floor of the Senate. So long as I am a Member of this body, whenever any proposal for appropriations is brought before us, or a bill to draft the boys from the farms, or any other kind of bill, I will not stand idly by and say, "We cannot discuss it."

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator think we ought to tell how many men we have in this service?

Mr. LANGER. I did not ask the Senator any such question.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator think we ought to tell their names and ages?

Mr. LANGER. The Senator knows very well that I did not ask such a question.

Mr. TYDINGS. It might be pertinent information.

Mr. LANGER. It might be, but I have not asked such foolish questions.

When it comes to creating an agency, I see no harm in seeing to it that the wording of the bill is right. I for one am not going to take any chances without a protest, even though I vote alone, against the establishment of a Gestapo in the United States by which people may be hounded and harassed by a central bureau, or by anyone else.

I know the fine mind of the Senator from Maryland, and I know what a big heart he has. I know how patriotic he is. He is one of the few Members of this body who has received the highest medal that it is possible for a man in the United States to get.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEFAUVER in the chair.) Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wish to say to my good friend, the Senator from North Dakota—and I hope he will forgive me if I appear a bit vain in what I am about to say—that military and scientific developments have reached such wide ramifications today that it is not always possible to give to the Senate the detailed information in regard to many things which we would be delighted to give to the Senate or to have Senators who are not on the committee know if they could come to the hearings where we hear those things.

My reactions were exactly the same as those of the Senator from North Dakota when I first approached this bill. But if my judgment is worth anything—and in making this statement I am carefully measuring my words—I wish Senators to know that in my opinion this bill is carefully worked out. Every safeguard which could possibly be put into it without destroying its purpose has been put into it. Our committee is unanimous about the bill, not because we are in favor of espionage, for we are opposed to it, but because we hope it will not occur.

So I hope the Senator from North Dakota will not suggest the amendments he has indicated, because in my judgment they would do the bill more harm than any good whatsoever which they could possibly do.

Mr. LANGER. If we leave paragraph (B) the way it is, it would do the country a great deal of harm. It now reads:

(B) While in the continental United States on leave, the service of any officer or employee shall be available for work or duties in the agency or elsewhere—

And so forth. Mr. President, my distinguished friend, the Senator from Maryland, has not had the experience I have had with being hounded by Mr. Ickes' men, when he was Secretary of the Interior—when, as Governor of the State of North Dakota, I had men following me all over the United States, and my telephone in the Governor's office was tapped, and my desk in the Governor's office was broken into by men whom Harold Ickes had snooping around trying to "pin" something on me—and when similar things happened to the Republican lieutenant governor of Iowa, for such attempts were likewise made to "pin" something on him.

So I say to the Senator from Maryland that, in my judgment, the bill as now written would enable this agency to send its men inside the United States, into places inside the United States, for nothing in the bill would prohibit that. The only way that could be prohibited would be by inserting the word "not" in the bill at the point I have indicated.

Frankly, Mr. President, I cannot see any objection to such a change in the bill. If we make that change, paragraph (B), on page 7, then will read:

While in the continental United States on leave, the service of any officer or employee shall not be available for work or duties except in the agency or for training or for reorientation for work; and the time of such work or duty shall not be counted as leave.

It seems to me that is an amendment which my friend, the Senator from Maryland, should, in good faith and good conscience, accept; and I believe it would entirely do away with the charges which were made in the House of Representatives—that these men might possibly be used to break up labor unions or for some similar purposes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, the Senator from North Dakota appreciates that I, as chairman of the committee, could not accept the amendment without breaking faith with the other members of the committee, who have not authorized me to do so.

I would say to the Senator from North Dakota that, as he has finally modified the amendment, he has made it a great deal more palatable. I cannot vote for it, but perhaps the Senate will agree with the point of view of the Senator from North Dakota. I hope the Senate will not, because I do not think the amendment is necessary. But I say that the Senator from North Dakota has made the amendment much more palatable now than it formerly was.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from Maryland would accept the amendment, because it is fundamentally right.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I say to the Senator from North Dakota that I should like to have him repeat the amendment.

Mr. LANGER. Certainly. It is as follows:

While in the continental United States on leave, the service of any officer or employee shall not be available for work or duties except in the agency or for training or for reorientation for work; and the time of such work or duty shall not be counted as leave.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I will take the amendment to conference. Of course, I do not like to be a party to any deception and I point out now that the amendment is new. It is worthy of thought. The Senator from North Dakota has made a real effort to interweave his philosophy with the exigencies and dangers involved in this whole proposition.

I will not promise that the amendment will come out of conference; but the Senator from Maryland will do his best to see to it that the amendment receives adequate consideration along the lines the Senator from North Dakota has mentioned.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I am very grateful to the Senator from Maryland.

Now let me ask about section 8. What can we do there to meet the objections of Mr. CELLER? I refer now to section 8 on page 12.

I may say to the distinguished Senator from Maryland that I know that provision is not right.

What I shall mention now may have no bearing at all upon this particular piece of proposed legislation, but I wish to call the attention of the distinguished Senator from Maryland to Charlie Chaplin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from North Dakota permit the Chair to interrupt long enough to ask whether a vote is to be taken on the amendment which already has been stated.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota has not yet offered the amendment. I hope he will offer his first amendment now, so that we may dispose of it.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, at this time I offer the following amendment to the pending measure: On page 7, strike out lines 3 to 7, inclusive, and substitute the following:

While in the continental United States on leave, the service of any officer or employee shall not be available for work or duties except in the agency or for training or for reorientation for work; and the time of such work or duty shall not be counted as leave.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I accept it, with the understanding that I will take the Senator's amendment to conference, if it is adopted, for further consideration, but that I do not feel bound to insist upon it if in the light of further consideration I feel that we cannot take it; but I accept it in good faith, and will attempt to see that it is given every consideration in line with the Senator's philosophy.

Mr. LANGER. Again, Mr. President, let me say that I am very grateful to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, let me inquire about the other amendment the Senator from North Dakota has in mind.

Mr. LANGER. I have in mind an amendment to section 8, on page 12. I would offer an amendment to it.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am afraid I cannot accede to that.

Mr. LANGER. I was going to suggest that somewhere in that provision we could insert the safeguards which Mr. CELLER requested, perhaps included the words "shall be provided by the Bureau of Immigration."

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, that comes under the Attorney General. The Bureau of Immigration is under the Attorney General's Office under the new Reorganization Act.

Mr. LANGER. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator from North Dakota would like me to add: Whenever the Director and the Attorney General or the head of the Bureau of Immigration.

I would be inclined to go that far, in order that the Immigration authorities might be put directly on notice.

Mr. LANGER. Does the Senator from Maryland mind changing that to read "or under rules and regulations provided by the Bureau of Immigration"?

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not think that could be done, for the considerations involved would be so divergent.

But I think the Bureau of Immigration would not admit a man unless the Director and the Bureau of Intelligence demonstrated that it was rather imperative that he be permitted to come in.

Mr. LANGER. Perhaps so.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, on behalf of this compromise arrangement, I ask that we consider an amendment, as coming from the Senator from North Dakota, as follows:

"Strike out the first two lines of section 8, on page 12, as they now appear, and insert 'Whenever the Director, the Attorney General, and the Commissioner of the Immigration Service shall determine that the entry of a particular alien into the United States'," and so forth. What the amendment does is simply to add the Commissioner of the Immigration Service. The Senator from North Dakota wants to make sure that the immigration authorities are apprized directly of the action that is proposed to be taken.

Mr. LANGER. And, I may say, would know who the alien is, and would make a record.

Mr. TYDINGS. I would accept that amendment if the Senator will offer it now, and ask for a vote.

Mr. LANGER. I offer the following amendment: On page 12, strike out line 17, and in line 18 strike out the word "General", so as to make it read:

Whenever the Director——

Mr. TYDINGS. "And the Attorney General."

Mr. LANGER. "And the Attorney General"——

Mr. TYDINGS. "Or the Commissioner of Immigration."

Mr. LANGER. "Or the Commissioner of Immigration shall determine."

Mr. TYDINGS. I want the Senator from North Dakota to understand that in accepting the amendment and taking it to conference, he realizes I have not had the chance to give it all the thought that ought to go into any change, but I am accepting it in good faith. We will consider it in conference, but if it does not come back in the bill, I hope the Senator will not charge me with failure to carry out any agreement.

Mr. LANGER. The Senator from Maryland is the last person in the world I would charge with failure to carry out an agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, just a moment. The Senator from Maryland read the amendment one way, and then it is being changed, and a very serious change is being made.

Mr. TYDINGS. I read it "or."

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes. "Or" is a far different word from "and." It will not mean anything if the word "or" is used. There would be no change in it whatever, if it is amended to read "or."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment again for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 12, in line 17, it is proposed to strike out the word "and" and insert a comma; and in line 18, after the word "General," it is proposed to insert the words "or the Commissioner of Immigration."

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask that the word "or" be stricken out preceding "the Commissioner of Immigration," and the word "and" inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will restate the amendment, as modified.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 12, in line 17, it is proposed to strike out the word "and" and insert a comma; and in line 18, after the word "General," it is proposed to insert the words "and the Commissioner of Immigration."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I hope we can now have the bill passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from North Dakota desires to bring up any other matters. These are the only two matters he discussed. The Senator has left the floor. I shall keep talking for a minute or two if I have the floor, until the Senator can be contacted and asked whether he has any other matters he wants to bring up.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. If the Senator does not mind, and if he has nothing else he wants to say, I shall be glad to speak for a minute or two, because I have a few thoughts to express.

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall be delighted to yield. I was only making a suggestion, so we would not take advantage of the absence of the Senator from North Dakota, in the event he had not finished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I wished to propound a question to the Senator from North Dakota, and I hope the Senator from Maryland will remain.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have not had luncheon yet. If it is going to take long, I think I should like to get a sandwich.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I am not going to talk very long. I assure the Senator I shall be very brief.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will remain.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I shall speak briefly, and I hope very much to the point. I trust the Senator will realize my anxiety about this legislation. I do not want to keep him from his luncheon, and I apologize to him for not having been here sooner, as I had intended to be, to hear his explanation and his argument on the bill, but I could not.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have just received word that, with the amendments adopted, the Senator from North Dakota has nothing more to say about the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is fine. I do not know whether I can join the Senator from North Dakota in approving the bill with these amendments or not, but I do want to make a brief statement. I regret very much that I have not heard the discussion on the bill, but as I read the measure, it is very radical legislation. I do not know of any legislation passed by Congress which is so sweeping and which goes so far as this legislation does, except the legislation pertaining to atomic energy. I know I should feel a great deal better had the bill been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and that committee had given attention to the sweeping provisions contained in the bill. Doubtless few Senators on the floor have the same fear of military fascism that I have; I doubt whether they have. I know that very few of us seem greatly concerned that 34 percent of all our taxes, all of our revenues, goes to the Pentagon Building. To me that is a very disturbing thing.

Perhaps I am entirely wrong; perhaps I do not comprehend the significance and effect of the pending legislation, but as I understand we are setting up in this country a military gestapo. I recall very well an argument made in this Chamber by the late Senator Norris, of Nebraska, away back in 1940. It impressed me deeply. He was arguing against the Congress of the United States setting up a gestapo in this country. I do not agree with what the Senator said in his references to the FBI, because I think the FBI has been a splendid organization, which has made a tremendous contribution to check crime and I should not want to do anything to curtail its operation. But I feel very certain that if Senator Norris were on the Senate floor today he would rise in his place to argue against the sweeping powers which are being vested in the military through this piece of legislation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I am glad to yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I may say to the Senator that I share every thought he has expressed about the inadvisability, the lack of necessity, and the unwarranted institution of any kind of gestapo, military or otherwise, in this country. The pending bill, as I said in my opening statement, has nothing to do with the internal affairs of the United States of America. All these men work outside the United States of America, and the bill so provides. They cannot work in the United States of America. Their functions are exclusively in foreign fields, and they are gathering, by close examination, information which it is deemed necessary for our country to have, as to where this or the other thing is going on, and as to what is taking place, so that we can make our plans accordingly. I am glad to reassure the Senator that our committee had the same thought he has so well expressed, and that there is nothing in the bill to permit internal military espionage in our country by agents constituted in the Military Establishment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It is very comforting to have the Senator make that statement. I may say I did not know the bill was coming up today. I knew it was on the calendar, and I promised myself faithfully that when I could get to it I would make a study of it and try to understand what its purposes are and what the effect of its language might be. But I have not had that opportunity. Perhaps it is all my own fault, and I regret it.

Mr. TYDINGS. I know the Senator is busy. I would say to the Senator from Colorado that the members of the Committee on Armed Services approached this proposition impelled by the same philosophy which the Senator from Colorado has expressed. We were perfectly willing to provide the Military Establishment with agents who would help in gathering pertinent military information in foreign fields. We were not willing to provide the military or any other establishment with agencies which would work in the United States in connection with our own people. There is nothing in this bill which touches the United States or is intended to touch the United States, except, of course, the headquarters are located here. The men must be told here what their missions are, and they must be given their instructions here, but the duties they perform are not performed in this country.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That reassures me completely.

Mr. TYDINGS. I know it does. Without that assurance, let me say that the Senator from Maryland would not be on this floor advocating the passage of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I have advocated for a long time that we develop our military information agencies so that we might better know what is going on all over the world. Of course, I would not want to do anything that would handicap in the slightest degree the agencies which we select to discover and to ferret out what is taking place all over the world. I realize the tremendous importance of counterespionage. The Senator's reassurance has completely satisfied me, and I shall vote in favor of his bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. I measured my words in making the statement. It is not our intention and it is not the intent of the language which we have adopted to make possible the things which the Senator has a right to fear in lieu of a closer examination. We have tried by testimony, by interrogation, and by the language of the bill to do exactly what the Senator wants done, and to stop right at the water's edge.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The reason, then, that the bill has not been sent to the Committee on the Judiciary is because it would not affect in any way justice within the United States. Is that correct?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct. It has to do with purely military intelligence, and with no other kind of intelligence at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to ask the Senator from Maryland with reference to paragraph (a) of section 6, on page 10 of the bill. I read it:

(a) Transfer to and receive from other Government agencies such sums as may be approved by the Bureau of the Budget, for the performance of any of the functions or activities authorized under sections 102 and 303 of the National Security Act of 1947 (Public Law 253, 80th Cong.), and any other Government agency is authorized to transfer to or receive from the Agency such sums without regard to any provisions of law limiting or prohibiting transfers between appropriations. Sums transferred to the Agency in accordance with this paragraph may be expended for the purposes and under the authority of this act without regard to limitations of appropriations from which transferred.

Mr. TYDINGS. Would the Senator like to have my explanation of that?

Mr. McKELLAR. I doubt the wisdom of that provision. The Committee on Appropriations appropriates specifically for every department of the Government. It has been found to work extraordinarily well. I am in favor of the bill; I am not opposed to it, but I think it would be safer and better——

Mr. TYDINGS. Would the Senator like me to tell him why that language is written into the bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes, I would.

Mr. TYDINGS. If this were a normal function of the Government, like, for instance, building a bridge, or buying an airplane, or providing for reforestation, or for the construction of a dam, the Senator's observation would be a very good one. But let me tell the Senator that the men who work in this particular field frequently lose their lives. As a matter of fact, to the certain knowledge of the Senator from Maryland, several have already lost their lives, and not under very pretty circumstances, because, quite often, if they are deleted, they are forced to tell why they are there, and the picture is not a pretty one. If there are vouchers containing the names and the circumstances, going through Government channels, it might be possible for foreign-espionage agents to check on who the agents are through every conceivable source of information.

Therefore, if we should employ the same kind of accounting as would be employed in connection with building a bridge, strange as it may seem, expert men, skilled in detecting from little things the probabilities, are quite often able to detect who the agents are, and in that way they are tracked down and lose their lives. This is no ordinary bridge-building proposition. This is a matter of life and death, affecting men who are trying to do something to aid the security of our country and who take an enormous risk. The committee, after thorough consideration, determined that it would be better to have this general procedure followed in order to protect the men, rather than to follow the orthodox procedure, which might result in the loss of their lives. That is the reason why that language is in the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall yield as soon as I complete my answer to the Senator from Tennessee.

I appreciate the observation of the Senator from Tennessee. Normally, it would be a most outrageous thing to proceed in this manner, but I think we owe these men every possible protection we can possibly give them. Their work is not child's play; it is very, very serious business. If we are to appropriate the necessary money, we have to do it in such a way as to "bring home the bacon," if we want our country to be secure, if we want to know how atomic energy is progressing in some other country, and what plants there may be.

I hate to discuss these matters on the floor, but there is no other way I can make the Senate have confidence in the bill than by discussing these things which I would rather not mention.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDRICKSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WHERRY. Do I have the floor, or does the Senator from Maryland have the floor? I would much rather the Senator from Maryland had it, so I could ask him some questions. I ask unanimous consent that I may ask a question or two regarding section 7 of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall be glad to answer the Senator's questions.

Mr. WHERRY. The section reads as follows:

SEC. 7. In the interests of the security of the foreign intelligence activities of the United States and in order further to implement the proviso of section 102 (d) (3) of the National Security Act of 1947 (Public Law 253, 80th Cong., 1st sess.) that the Director of Central Intelligence shall be responsible for protecting intelligence sources and methods from unauthorized disclosure, the Agency shall be exempted from the provisions of sections 1 and 2, chapter 795 of the act of August 28, 1935—and the provisions of any other law which require the publication or disclosure of the organization, functions, names, official titles, salaries, or numbers of personnel employed by the Agency: Provided, That in furtherance of this section, the Director of the Bureau of the Budget shall make no reports to the Congress in connection with the Agency under section 607, title VI, chapter 212, of the act of June 30, 1945.

Are we doing this now?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. Then why is it necessary to have the legislation?

Mr. TYDINGS. I think it is a question whether or not the law is being winked at unless this bill is written into law. It is written now to effect a cure. It is a question as to whether we have the authority to act. In my opinion we have not the authority, but nobody is going to raise the question.

Mr. WHERRY. But we are actually doing what is provided for in the bill?

Mr. TYDINGS. Much of it.

Mr. WHERRY. Are we going to expand what we are now doing if we get additional authority?

Mr. TYDINGS. No.

Mr. WHERRY. The intention really is to implement what we intended to do under the skeleton act?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator has stated it exactly; the skeleton act was passed, and this clarifies that act.

Mr. WHERRY. In the committee report which the able chairman of the Armed Services Committee has submitted to the Senate appears a comment on section 7, to be found on page 4, as follows:

Section 7 exempts the Agency from the provisions of 5 United States Code 654, which require publication of personnel data in the Official Register of the United States. Section 7 also exempts the Bureau of the Budget from including in its public report to the Congress the Agency's personnel strength.

Does the section do any more than that?

Mr. TYDINGS. No.

Mr. WHERRY. That is all that is done, if we adopt this section?

Mr. TYDINGS. I am going to say something which the Senator already knows, but for the record. Ours will perhaps be the only Government having a law providing for such an activity. Other governments simply appropriate a disguised sum of money, without any authority of law, to handle the whole matter through some government official. We are writing the whole law out. I regret we cannot proceed in any other way. If the Senate knew about the details, it might be willing to do as other countries do, but we do not do business that way. We are not doing what other countries do. We are throwing every possible democratic safeguard around it as we go along.

Mr. WHERRY. I want to be sure that the assertions made in the committee report state what we are doing when we adopt section 7, and that it is to exempt the agency from the provisions of law I have just mentioned.

Mr. TYDINGS. For national security only.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator from Nebraska for his contribution.

Mr. WHERRY. I was a member of the Committee on Appropriations, with the distinguished Senator from Maryland, when we were asked for a huge appropriation for a purpose with which we were not familiar.

Mr. TYDINGS. A billion dollars.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes. It took much faith on my part, as one charged with a part of the responsibility of making appropriations, to agree to that. A billion dollars is a great deal of money. Yet we were told that it was in the interest of national security, and we asked no questions. Afterward, of course, we discovered that it was for the purpose of developing the atomic bomb.

Mr. TYDINGS. This is in the same category.

Mr. WHERRY. We are now extending the authority, and I wanted to have it made indubitably certain that section 7, which to me is the meat of the bill, is included for the purposes outlined in the committee report, and does not extend beyond that.

Mr. TYDINGS. In measured words, I can answer the Senator in the affirmative.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be offered, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 2663) was read the third time and passed.

RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENT POLICY

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, when the 1934 Trade Agreements Act comes before the Senate for the proposed 3-year extension, I intend to offer the flexible import-fee bill, which I am today placing before this body as a substitute policy. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the flexible import-fee bill, and to have it printed in the body of the RECORD. The flexible import-fee principle establishes a clear-cut American policy which would provide a definite basis for cooperation among the nations of the world and a definite market for foreign goods in this country.

THE THREE-PART "FREE TRADE" PROGRAM

As a result of the administration's three-part "free trade" program, under which we are openly encouraging a large increase in imports from the European countries and urging them to become self-sufficient within and among themselves and to manipulate the price of their currency for trade advantage—many believe that this Nation is heading into a serious depression.

FREE TRADE AND UNEMPLOYMENT

It is reported that there are more than 4,000,000 unemployed at this time and probably in excess of 10,000,000 partially unemployed in this country due principally to actual and threatened imports of products from the low-wage standard of living European and Asiatic nations.

DEFINITE MARKET FOR FOREIGN GOODS

Under the proposal of the flexible import fee adjustment of rates, a definite market basis is established in the United States for the goods of all foreign nations, but they are the judges of their own living standards. However, under such a provision they would be encouraged to raise their wage living standards because they would immediately get credit by a corresponding reduction in the tariff or import fee, and when their standards of living approximated our own, then the objective of free trade would be an almost automatic and immediate result. But in the meantime, our wage standard of living would be protected.

FLEXIBLE IMPORT FEE VERSUS "FREE TRADE"

This principle is in direct contrast to the free trade program of the State Department, and all subterfuge, including a manipulation of their currency values and selling under actual costs by such foreign governments to crowd another nation's products out of the foreign markets, including our own—as evidenced by a New York Times dispatch dated May 21 of this year—will be automatically stopped by the adoption of the flexible import fee principle.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the dispatch printed in the body of the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRADE LAG STUDIED FROM ECA NATIONS—GOVERNMENT SEEKS TO LEARN WHY FLOW FROM SUCH AREAS IS NOT UP TO EXPECTATIONS—TEN BILLION SEEN POSSIBLE—WOULD MEAN THREE BILLION RISE OVER 1948, REDUCE TRADE GAP AND EASE DOLLAR SHORTAGE

Surveys under Government auspices are being quietly made in trade quarters here to ascertain why the volume of imports from European countries aided by the Economic Cooperation Administration is not larger, it was learned here yesterday.

During the past week, field surveys have been made here by a team of keymen, in which the views and experiences of active importers were sought in a wide variety of lines.

Nothing was divulged as to the information or conclusions reached during the course of the surveys, other than that the data would be of assistance in coordinating the work of official agencies.

SCOPE OF FIELD WORK

The scope of the field work was indicated in scheduled contacts with importers of woolens, linens, laces, rayon and staple fiber, cottons, floor coverings, embroidery, metal products, needles, automobiles, leather goods, chinaware, department store goods, motorcycles, ball bearings, machinery, silverware, and foodstuffs. In all, some 40 different import lines from varied countries were canvassed, it is understood.

While no official statement is likely until the reports based on the surveys are made, if then, it is an open secret that Government agencies are anxious to spur imports by the United States as a major means of strengthening world economic recovery and curbing the dollar shortage and trade deficits abroad.

Import barriers ranging from antiquated customs procedure to excessively high prices abroad in the face of a declining price trend here have been cited as the major obstacles to the larger import volume that is felt necessary to reduce the export "gap," which exceeded $5,000,000,000 last year.

Foreign trade experts have calculated that if business conditions and national income continue favorable here, the United States could absorb $10,000,000,000 in imports from all parts of the world. This optimum figure, buttressed by American investment and tourist spending abroad, it is believed, would support and pay for a high level of American exports.

It compares with about $7,000,000,000 in imports for 1948.

FIRST QUARTER IMPORTS

For the first quarter of 1949, imports were close to the 1948 level for the same period. Doubt appeared to be rising, however, that total imports in 1949 will materially exceed 1948 figures, with much depending on business conditions here.

High prices abroad have been stressed as probably the major factor tending to limit European imports. In the case of British goods, this was highlighted a few days ago by Sir Stafford Cripps, Britain's economic chief, who told a conference of editors in London that prices on export goods must be cut. Emphasizing again his position that no devaluation of sterling is contemplated, Sir Stafford noted consumer resistance on the part of American buyers who were hoping to get British goods at lower prices.

Prior to recent developments, Great Britain had set a goal of $720,000,000 in exports to the United States and Canada for 1949. Sir Graham Cunningham has been named to head the drive, becoming head of a new department representing British industrial interests which will work closely with the Government's export promotion agencies.

1934 TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, it will be remembered that the Eightieth Congress extended the 1934 Trade Agreements Act for 1 year, timing it to come up at the same time as the second-year extension of the ECA or Marshall-plan appropriation and the proposed adoption of the International Trade Organization.

PERIL POINT

We added the provision to the Trade Agreements Act that the Tariff Commission must furnish the President what we called the peril point—that is, the tariff rate or import fee below which the production of the specific product under consideration would be endangered in this country—and where the floor under wages would be ineffective and would cause unemployment or a definite lowering of our standard of living.

PERIL POINT INEFFECTIVE

I am for the inclusion of the peril point—the danger point to employment and business as determined by the Tariff Commission in each case—at the same time feeling that it will have no practical effect except an opportunity for the President to emphasize his explanation to the Congress and to the public that naturally some sacrifices are necessary if we are to build a great foreign trade structure—the peril-point provision simply requires the President to advise Congress his reasons for disregarding the Tariff Commission's findings—there is nothing of a mandatory nature included in the provision.

UNDER FLEXIBLE IMPORT FEE, PERIL POINT BECOMES THE TARIFF

Under the proposed flexible import fee bill provisions, the peril point, as determined by the Tariff Commission as the danger point to employment and industry, would become the tariff or import fee.

FLEXIBLE IMPORT FEE POLICY NOT NEW

The flexible import fee policy is not new—the Sixty-seventh Congress in 1922 passed such an act which has been carried forward as section 336 of the present Tariff Act. Under the act, however, the President must initiate such changes, and rather than follow such procedure he has elected to proceed under the State Department's free-trade theory based upon the 1934 Trade Agreements Act.

My bill simply transfers the necessary action from the President to the Tariff Commission and simplifies the method of determining the peril point which would then become the tariff or import fee.

"RECIPROCAL TRADE"—A CATCHWORD TO SELL FREE TRADE

There is no such thing as the Reciprocal Trade Act—which the 1934 Trade Agreements Act is commonly called—the words "reciprocal trade" do not occur in the 1934 Trade Agreements Act—it is not reciprocal and that is not the effect produced by the selective free-trade policy which the State Department, under the guise of the act, has pursued based on the act. The Department's theory is that the more we divide our markets with the nations of the world the less their trade-balance deficits will be.

Reciprocal trade is simply a catch phrase to sell free trade to the American public—and they have done a fair job.

MANY CLOSING—TEXTILES BUSINESS FEELING PINCH

As a direct result of the 3-part free-trade program of the State Department and the administration—the mines are closing, the textiles are feeling the pinch, the precision instrument business and hundreds of other industries which have been supporting the employment and taxable property in this country are jittery—potential investors for new capital investment are nonexistent and a bad atmosphere exists generally throughout the business world.

TRADE AGREEMENTS IMPOSSIBLE

It is, of course, impossible to make trade agreements with any foreign nation that manipulates its currency, and they all do—since all they have to do in order to nullify their obligations under the agreement is to lower the price of the pound, franc, or guilder, or whatever they use for money. Such devaluation makes the entire agreement ineffectual.

MOST FAVORED NATION

The administration's policy in such trades also includes the most favored nation clause—multilateral agreements—the effect of which is to extend to every other nation the advantages given any specific nation in the agreement without such other nations making any concessions at all.

FOREIGN TRADE AUTHORITY

The reorganized Tariff Commission to be known as the Foreign Trade Authority, would prescribe import fees on foreign articles, so as to bring their selling price in the American market up to, and within, limits whereby the domestic article could compete. The only objective sought in this bill is to enable the American product to compete on a fair and reasonable basis with the foreign imported item. Under the bill, fair and reasonable competition is found to exist if the price of the imported item is a fair price and not substantially below the price at which the domestic product can be offered to the same class of consumers in the principal American markets.

FAIR AND REASONABLE PRICE

A fair price simply means a determination as to whether the selling price is a true commercial and economic price or an artificial price deliberately set by the foreign country for the purpose of capturing the American market by underselling the domestic product.

Various economic factors, such as devaluation of foreign currencies and sales at uneconomic prices to secure dollar credits are considerations which would be taken into account.

NEITHER HIGH NOR LOW, BUT A DIFFERENTIAL OF COST PRICE

One of the favorite State Department propaganda arguments is that the opponents of the trade-agreements program are high protective tariff advocates, and that they are afraid of competition. Under the flexible-import-fee principle there is no consideration of a high or low tariff or import fee. The adoption of this principle will assure competition; it guarantees fair and reasonable competition between similar products of foreign and domestic origin. What this bill eliminates is permitting products of cheap foreign labor to be dumped into our markets and sell below our high-living standard of living costs of making the same item. Anyone who can advocate lowering tariffs without lowering wages, just does not understand pay rolls. The import fee is the floor under wages.

SUBSIDIES FOR TARIFFS

The administration's long-range program has been to substitute subsidies for the tariff and import fees, so that any product not supported by such subsidy is simply due for a severe cut or is on the way out.

Mr. President, at this point I introduce my bill to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, and for other purposes, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD, and for its appropriate reference.

The bill (S. 1965) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. MALONE, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SECTION 1. It is declared to be the policy of the Congress—

(a) to facilitate and encourage the importation into the United States of foreign goods and products in quantities sufficient to supply the needs of the United States economy;

(b) to foster and provide for the export of the products of American industry and agriculture in quantities sufficient to pay for the needed imports;

(c) to develop and promote a well-balanced, integrated, and diversified production within the United States so as to maintain a sound and prosperous national economy and a high level of wages and employment in industry and agriculture;

(d) to provide necessary flexibility of import duties thereby making possible appropriate adjustments in response to changing economic conditions;

(e) to assure the accomplishment of these objectives by returning to and maintaining hereafter in the United States the control over American import duties now subject to international agreements.

RESTATEMENT OF EXISTING IMPORT DUTIES

SEC. 2. Title I, paragraphs 1 to 1559, inclusive, of the Tariff Act of 1930 are hereby amended by repealing the classifications and rates therein contained and substituting therefor the classifications and rates obtaining and in effect on June 30, 1949, by reason of proclamations of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930 or otherwise.

FORMATION OF FOREIGN TRADE AUTHORITY

SEC. 3. Title III, part II, section 330, of the Tariff Act of 1930 is hereby amended to read as follows:

"PART II—FOREIGN TRADE AUTHORITY

"SEC. 330. Organization of the Foreign Trade Authority.

"(a) Membership: The United States Tariff Commission shall be reorganized and reconstituted as the Foreign Trade Authority (hereinafter referred to as the 'Authority') to be composed of six directors to be hereafter appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The original directors of the Authority shall be the same persons now serving as Commissioners of the United States Tariff Commission, each such person to serve as a director of the Authority until the date when his term of office as a Commissioner of the United States Tariff Commission would have expired. Thereafter the term of office of any successor to any such director shall expire 6 years from the date of the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed except that a director appointed to fill a vacancy occurring for any reason other than the expiration of a term as herein provided shall be appointed only for the remainder of the term which his predecessor would otherwise have served. Directors shall be eligible for appointment to succeed themselves if otherwise qualified therefor. No person shall be eligible for appointment as a director unless he is a citizen of the United States, and, in the judgment of the President, is possessed of qualifications requisite for developing expert knowledge of tariff problems and efficiency in administering the provisions of this act. Not more than three of the directors shall be members of the same political party, and in making appointments members of different political parties shall be appointed alternately as nearly as may be practicable.

"(b) Chairman, Vice Chairman, and salary: The President shall annually designate one of the directors as Chairman and one as Vice Chairman of the Authority. The Vice Chairman shall act as Chairman in case of absence or disability of the Chairman. A majority of the directors in office shall constitute a quorum, but the Authority may function notwithstanding vacancies. Each director shall receive a salary of $12,000 a year. No director shall actively engage in any business, vocation, or employment other than that of serving as a director."

APPOINTMENT OF SECRETARY

SEC. 4. Title III, part II, section 331 (a), of the Tariff Act of 1930 is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(a) Personnel: The Authority shall appoint a secretary who shall receive a salary of $9,000 per year, and the Authority is hereby empowered to employ and fix the compensations of such special experts, examiners, clerks, and other employees of the Authority as it may find necessary for the proper performance of its duties."

ADMINISTRATION OF TRADE AGREEMENTS

SEC. 5. Title III, part II, of the Tariff Act of 1930 is amended by adding at the end of section 331 the following new section:

"SEC. 331A. Administration of trade agreements.

"(a) All powers vested in, delegated to, or otherwise properly exercisable by the President or any other officer or agency of the United States in respect to the foreign trade agreements entered into pursuant to section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930 are hereby transferred to, and shall be exercisable by the Authority, including, but not limited to, the right to invoke the various escape clauses, reservations, and options therein contained, and to exercise on behalf of the United States any rights or privileges therein provided for the protection of the interests of the United States.

"(b) The Authority is hereby authorized and directed—

"(1) to terminate as of the next earliest date therein provided, and in accordance with the terms thereof, all the foreign trade agreements entered into by the United States pursuant to section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930;

"(2) to prescribe, upon termination of any foreign trade agreement, that the import duties established therein shall remain the same as existed prior to such termination, and such import duties shall not thereafter be increased or reduced except in accordance with the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended by this act."

PERIODIC ADJUSTMENT OF IMPORT DUTIES

SEC. 6. Title III, part II, section 336, of the Tariff Act of 1930 is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 336. Periodic adjustment of import duties.

"(a) The Authority is authorized and directed, from time to time, and subject to the limitations hereinafter provided, to prescribe and establish import duties which will, within equitable limits, provide for fair and reasonable competition between domestic articles and like or similar foreign articles in the principal market or markets of the United States. A foreign article shall be considered as providing fair and reasonable competition to United States producers of a like or similar article if the Authority finds as a fact that the landed duty paid price of the foreign article in the principal market or markets in the United States is a fair price, including a reasonable profit to the importers, and is not substantially below the price, including a reasonable profit for the domestic producers, at which the like or similar domestic articles can be offered to consumers of the same class by the domestic industry in the principal market or markets in the United States.

"(b) In determining whether the landed duty paid price of a foreign article, including a fair profit for the importers, is, and may continue to be, a fair price under subdivision (a) of this section, the Authority shall take into consideration, insofar as it finds it practicable—

"(1) The lowest, highest, average, and median landed duty paid price of the article from foreign countries offering substantial competition;

"(2) Any change that may occur or may reasonably be expected in the exchange rates of foreign countries either by reason of devaluation or because of a serious unbalance of international payments;

"(3) The policy of foreign countries designed substantially to increase exports to the United States by selling at unreasonably low and uneconomic prices to secure additional dollar credits;

"(4) Increases or decreases of domestic production and of imports on the basis of both unit volume of articles produced and articles imported, and the respective percentages of each;

"(5) The actual and potential future ratio of volume and value of imports to volume and value of production, respectively;

"(6) The probable extent and duration of changes in production costs and practices;

"(7) The degree to which normal cost relationships may be affected by grants, subsidies, excises, export taxes, or other taxes, or otherwise, in the country of origin; and any other factors either in the United States or in other countries which appear likely to affect production costs and competitive relationships.

"(c) Decreases or increases in import duties designed to provide for fair and reasonable competition between foreign and domestic articles may be made by the Authority either upon its own motion or upon application of any person or group showing adequate and proper interest in the import duties in question: Provided, however, That no change in any import duty shall be ordered by the Authority until after it shall have first conducted a full investigation and presented tentative proposals followed by a public hearing at which interested parties have an opportunity to be heard.

"(d) The Authority, in setting import duties so as to establish fair and reasonable competition as herein provided, may, in order to effectuate the purposes of this act, prescribe specific duties or ad valorem rates of duty upon the foreign value or export value as defined in sections 402 (c) and 402 (d) of the Tariff Act of 1930 or upon the United States value as defined in section 402 (e) of said act.

"(e) In order to carry out the purposes of this act, the Authority is authorized to transfer any article from the dutiable list to the free list, or from the free list to the dutiable list.

"(f) Any increase or decrease in import duties ordered by the Authority shall become effective 90 days after such order is announced: Provided, That any such order is first submitted to Congress by the Authority and is not disapproved, in whole or in part, by concurrent resolution of Congress within 60 days thereafter.

"(g) No order shall be announced by the Authority under this section which increases existing import duties on foreign articles if the Authority finds as a fact that the domestic industry operates, or the domestic article is produced, in a wasteful, inefficient, or extravagant manner.

"(h) The Authority, in the manner provided for in subdivisions (c) and (f) in this section, may impose quantitative limits on the importation of any foreign article, in such amounts, and for such periods, as it finds necessary in order to effectuate the purposes of this act: Provided, however, That no such quantitative limit shall be imposed contrary to the provisions of any foreign trade agreement in effect pursuant to section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930.

"(i) For the purpose of this section—

"(1) the term 'domestic article' means an article wholly or in part the growth or product of the United States; and the term 'foreign article' means an article wholly or in part the growth or product of a foreign country;

"(2) the term 'United States' includes the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia;

"(3) the term 'foreign country' means any empire, country, dominion, colony, or protectorate, or any subdivision or subdivisions thereof (other than the United States and its possessions);

WORLD ECONOMIC SOCIALISM

Mr. MALONE. The State Department plan—including the three-part free-trade program—adds up to world economic socialism—world economic socialism as evidenced by a statement by an Assistant Secretary of State emphasizing the program.

THORPE—THREE-PART FREE-TRADE STATEMENT

Willard H. Thorpe, Assistant Secretary of State, testified before the Senate Finance Committee for the extension of the 1934 Trade Agreements Act, on January 24 of this year when he said that:

1. The trade agreements program is an integral part of our over-all program for world economic recovery.

2. The European recovery program (Marshall plan) extends immediate assistance on a short-term basis to put the European countries back on their feet.

3. The International Trade Organization upon which Congress will soon be asked to take favorable action provides a long-term mechanism by which all countries' commercial policies, in the broadest sense of the terms, may be tested and guided into conformity with a pattern which will maximize trade and minimize friction arising out of expectations.

Mr. President, if anyone can understand that particular phrase he will have to have a State Department education.

Quoting from Mr. Thorpe again:

Each contributes to an effective and consistent whole.

That is the reason, Mr. President, I have tied the three-part program together several times on the Senate floor. It is only recently that the State Department has admitted it in a statement in so many words.

It is evident from the State Department's spokesman that no one part of this three-part program can be considered separately, but must be viewed together to understand the objectives of the administration which is a division of the markets of this Nation with the nations of the world—and bringing the wage-living standard of American workmen down to the level of the low cost of living standard of European and Asiatic labor.

OLD-WORLD NATIONS OUTTRADE US

The Old World—the European Marshall-plan nations—is more adept at manipulations of the factors affecting international trade than this Nation can possibly be. They have competed with each other and with other parts of the world for such trade for more than a thousand years—starting in the days of the buccaneers and the pirates—our merchant ships were simply captured and confiscated wherever found and towed into port. Later the colonial system was established by the empire-minded nations and the system of empire preferential rates was established.

EMPIRE PREFERENTIAL RATES

Empire preferential rates, Mr. President, simply means that under the colonial system the raw materials come to the mother country through the influence of such rates, and then the same principle as utilized in selling the manufactured product back to the colonial possession.

The first—that is, the buccaneer system—of course, became outlawed in the natural course of events, and the second has begun to wear thin, due to the impossibility of the empire-minded nations protecting and keeping the colonies permanently subdued.

They have now arrived at the three-part free-trade system, which includes, first, the making up of the trade-balance deficits of each of the European nations in cash, where our chief export is cash; second, the 1934 Trade Agreements Act, under which the State Department has adopted a selective free-trade theory on the basis that the more they divide our markets with the nations of the world, the less their trade-balance deficits; and, third, the international trade program—with 58 nations having 58 votes—we would have the same vote as Siam, the smallest nation, to which each nation would assign its tariff and import fee-making power, and they would meet once each year and divide the production in the markets of the world eventually on the basis of population. This is the modern way of gaining trade advantage.

ECONOMIC PITFALLS

To visualize some of the economic pitfalls when we enter the field of economic diplomacy, I asked unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point an article by Joseph E. Evans, appearing in the Wall Street Journal on May 26, 1949.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRESSURE ON BRITAIN—IT MOUNTS FROM INSIDE AND OUT; STERLING DEVALUATION WOULD POSTPONE BUT NOT PREVENT AN EXPLOSION

(By Joseph E. Evans)

Something has got to give. That describes Britain's economic situation today.

So much pressure is building from so many directions that an explosion is inevitable. Whether the blow-up will occur in the Labor government's inflated view of the pound, the government's inflated view of the worth of British exports or even in the Labor government itself is a matter of opinion. The plain fact is that Britain cannot go on as it is.

The way it is going is the way to economic collapse. Perhaps not collapse with a bang, but a slow leak can deflate a tire as well as a puncture.

Here is some of the mural handwriting:

Britain's foreign trade has slumped all over. Its trade deficit with dollar countries, spectacularly cut last year, has been increasing all this year. Its general trade deficit more than doubled last month. There is no reason to suppose these conditions will improve.

While Britain grows poorer, its powerful trade unions are demanding to be made richer. They want higher real wages in addition to government health services and subsidies on food and housing. Despite Chancellor of the Exchequer Sir Stafford Cripps' specific assertion to the contrary, they are convinced they can have their cake and eat it too.

The pressure is not only internal; it is also external. International Monetary Fund, Economic Cooperation Administration and United States Treasury officials are believed to favor general readjustment of European exchange rates, including that of the pound.

The expectation of sterling devaluation is becoming so general that a New York distributor of British woolens has already announced he will protect his customers against devaluation up to the end of this year. British officials, of course, refuse to admit the possibility; as recently as last week Cripps said there could be no question of devaluation.

STERLING BALANCES ACCUMULATE

But the heaviest artillery trained on British monetary policy is mounted on the continent. Britain's partners in the Organization for European Economic Cooperation, which was set up to unite the recovery of Marshall plan recipients, complain that overvaluation of the pound prevents them from importing from Britain, while as a result of their exports to the sterling area they accumulate quantities of sterling which they cannot use. When the continent's trade with so large an area as the sterling zone is hit, the continent is in trouble.

The effect of this is further to choke not only trade with Britain but trade all over western Europe. That trade is anyway at such low ebb the OEEC hopes to increase it by the end of the Marshall plan only to the levels of 1938, although there has been a population increase of approximately 9 percent since then.

The OEEC is currently trying to unsnarl the web of exchange controls, import restrictions, tariff and preference barriers and discriminatory practices which is hogtieing trade among member countries. If they do not openly say so, the continental nations strongly imply that British policy is to a large extent responsible for the maintenance of these restrictions.

This is what happens. Italy, which has some $30,000,000 in sterling kicking around, will not buy from Britain because it says it can't get what it wants there; anyway it thinks the pound is priced too high and therefore it won't get its money's worth. Italy could use its idle sterling to buy from other countries but says other countries don't want to sell their goods at the British-fixed rate of 2,317 lire to the pound.

Multiplying that situation a few times produces an inevitable sum; strangulation of trade. Furthermore, the accumulation of sterling balances in other countries makes Britain trade increasingly by means of bilateral arrangements—when neither goods nor money can move freely, trade is reduced to a you-scratch-my-back-and-I'll scratch-yours basis. Trade is thereby still further restricted.

Last year the OEEC set up a so-called intra-European payments plan, which it was hoped would cut away some of the restrictions, help stabilize currencies and thus stimulate trade. A special fund of ECA conditional dollars was established from which nations could draw in proportion as they extended credits, or drawing rights, in their own currencies to other countries.

But the countries didn't draw much. Italy used none of the $27,000,000 allotted her, very probably because $25,000,000 of it was in sterling. The trizone of Germany, entitled to $114,000,000, used less than $25,000,000.

RESORT TO BILATERAL DEALINGS

The payments plan actually encouraged bilateralism, because it fixed the amount of credits each OEEC member should give or receive from every other member. It offered no incentive to reducing dollar needs either by pushing exports to America or by reducing imports from America. And it forced trade into lines of rigid national planning.

This scheme expires the end of next month. The OEEC is frantically trying to devise something better. There is talk, among other ideas, of extending the drawing rights to achieve a greater degree of multilateralism—that is, normal free trade. But until the British knot is untangled any such efforts are doomed to be palliatives. The continental countries seem determined that the British knot shall be untangled.

With so much emphasis on the overvaluation of the pound, the solution would seem simply to devalue it. And that would be at least a temporary help. But it would not be a cure. It would not be a cure because the labor government probably would not devalue enough. If it devalued the pound to a realistic rate it would be cutting its own political throat.

What would happen? Exports would go up, but what Britain bought for dollars would be costlier. At home, food would be more expensive; if the Government didn't raise prices, it would have to take more out of the taxpayer's pocket to subsidize food. Either way the clamor for wage increases which the Government couldn't grant could well be enough to unseat the Labor Party.

But devaluation would not be a cure for the more important reason that it does not go to the root of the evil. The root is rigid economic control, of which currency overvaluation is a branch. But the British Labor Government will not cut out the root because it would then cease to be a labor—that is, a Socialist—government.

What the labor government, feeling this combination of pressures, may do is order a token devaluation of the pound. The pressure would be somewhat eased thereby, and the whole picture of the European recovery program made clearer, but it would not be a fundamental solution. The labor government might postpone but it would not avert economic crisis.

It is just possible that the forces exerting the present pressure on Britain will, like the pagan gods of old, reject such an inadequate offering. In that case, is difficult to see how the labor government could avoid its fate.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONE. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I did not quite understand who the man was who wrote this article.

Mr. MALONE. His name is Evans. He is a special writer. It so happens that Mr. Evans, whom I do not know, outlined almost perfectly, and much better than I could have done it, the intricacies and the many factors of international finance and the finagling for trade advantage in the manipulation of the price of the currencies of the various nations of the world, and the matter of certain foreign nations taking a loss in order to capture the market in this or another country, about which the United States representatives seem to be entirely ignorant.

Mr. LANGER. I thank the Senator.

AN AMERICAN POLICY

Mr. MALONE. The alternative to all this finagling through the manipulation of their currencies by foreign nations for trade advantage and financing a part of the cost of a product to take the market in our country, is simply to establish an American policy which will maintain our standard of living while we are assisting to the best of our ability other nations of the world to raise their own. It would then be in their interest to conform and cooperate and would result in raising their own living standards.

FLEXIBLE IMPORT FEE—MEET CHANGING ECONOMICS

In other words, if we have a definite, flexible import fee that would represent at all times the differential in cost as between the foreign product delivered in this country and our own production costs with respect to each specific product. The import fee is flexible and can be adjusted by the foreign trade authority—now the Tariff Commission—to conform to the changes in the economics of nations which are of course in a continued state of flux in the same manner as our own economic system.

Such adjustments can be made by the authority to meet the manipulations of currency or any other factor utilized for trade advantage. Then, as other nations raise their standard of living, they will receive credit through a comparable lowering of the import fee and when their living approximates our own, free trade will be the immediate and automatic result. It will be to their interest to pay higher wages to their own people, rather than come in at our level of costs, and pay the difference into the United States Treasury.

IMPORT FEE DOES NOT PREVENT IMPORTS

Such an import fee does not prevent imports, but would bring the product in on our basis of costs. It would be a floor under wages, and a protection to the workingman of America, as well as to our economy.

Such is the legislative proposal which I have offered—called the flexible import fee—under which other nations would receive immediate credit, through a lowered import fee, for any advance in their standard of living. Of course, when they reach approximately the level of our living standard, free trade, which is the desirable objective, is almost the automatic and immediate result.

SENATOR ARTHUR CAPPER

In that connection I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks an article written by former Senator Capper and published in the Topeka Daily Capital, of Topeka, Kans., for May 23, 1949.

In this article former Senator Capper very ably explains why such a plan as is proposed by the State Department is impossible of operation. The flexible import fee is simply a floor under wages, and supports our wage and living standards, and is designed to maintain our high living standard while assisting other nations of the world to raise their own. No advantage would be gained by holding wages in the colonial possessions down.

NO ADVANTAGE TO HOLD LIVING STANDARD DOWN

Immediately it would become advantageous to other countries to raise wages to their own people and to raise the level of their economic system. At present it is to their advantage to make a 3-year agreement with the State Department and then lower the price of their currency so as to come below any agreement they may have made up to that time.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CAPPER QUESTIONS SOUNDNESS OF ALL THREE BIG WORLD ASSISTANCE PLANS

There is nothing reciprocal about the reciprocal trade agreements program, former Senator Arthur Capper said yesterday as he quoted Senator MALONE, an opponent of the plan. The complete text of the weekly Capper message heard over Station WIBW follows:

Sometime ago I received a letter from Senator GEORGE W. MALONE, of Nevada, about which I had intended to talk to you earlier. But other things kept coming up and our discussion of Senator MALONE'S views of the so-called reciprocal trade agreements, the Marshall plan, and the proposed International Trade Organization has been delayed.

GEORGE W. MALONE, the Senator from Nevada, by the way, is a Kansan. He was born on a farm near Fredonia; played twilight baseball in southeast Kansas in the early years of this century. Then he went to the west coast, took an engineering course at the University of Nevada, went into the Army in 1917; has served as department commander and national vice commander of the American Legion. He is recognized as a leading engineer throughout the Mountain States. Kansas-born GEORGE MALONE is serving his first term in the Senate of the United States, is a Republican with considerable independence in his make-up.

Senator MALONE is opposed, strongly opposed to the so-called Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. He was one of the few who was outspoken against the Marshall plan. And he is preparing to make a last-ditch fight against Senate ratification of the International Trade Organization treaty when that comes up.

Appearing before the Senate Finance Committee recently, Senator MALONE informed that committee of his opposition to all three of these programs.

"The people of this Nation do not realize the deadly serious long-range effect on the workers, farmers, merchants, manufacturers, and industrialists," Senator MALONE declared, "of the permanent free-trade plan of the economic one-worlders included in this three-phase program, of which the 1934 Trade Agreements Act is but one part."

At this point I should explain that the Eightieth Congress renewed the Trade Agreements Act for 1 year, but included a provision requiring a report from the Tariff Commission as to the effect of any proposed reduction in tariff rates before these should go into effect. The administration is now asking a 3-year extension, without the protective tariff commission provision.

Now we'll go back to Senator MALONE. He insists there is nothing reciprocal about the so-called reciprocal trade-agreements program. And I believe he is correct. Under this program the American farmer was sold down the river in the thirties. I called attention to this at the time. The outbreak of World War II created a temporary and highly artificial market for American farm products, or this would have been recognized as a fact years ago.

The question of high- or low-import fees, or tariffs, is not the main issue, according to GEORGE MALONE. Instead, the question is whether the difference in cost of production of an article here and abroad is to be taken into account in fixing import fee, or tariff. I am taking it for granted you know that in the United States a high-wage standard of living prevails. Most of the rest of the world lives, exists on a low-wage standard of living.

"The difference in production costs is mostly due to the difference in wage or labor costs," Senator MALONE explained. "Especially since our up-to-date machinery and technical know-how, including the assembly-line methods, are immediately available to these low-wage countries." Senator MALONE then made the flat charge, and there is a lot of truth in it as I see the picture.

"The three-part program currently advocated b ythe State Department is designed to undermine the basic economic structure of this country," Senator MALONE charges. "It has the objective of dividing our markets and leveling our living standards to the low-wage living standards of the Asiatic and European nations."

While I would not go quite so far as to say the program is designed to do just that, I will say I thoroughly agree with Senator MALONE that will be the end result.

The three parts of the program, MALONE says, are these:

First, appropriations to make up the trade-balance deficits of the European nations in cash each year, currently labeled the Marshall plan. Our chief export is cash.

Second, extend the selective free trade principle adopted by the State Department through a 3-year extension of the 1934 Trade Agreements Act.

Third, adoption of the International Trade Organization (ITO)—58 nations with 58 votes—each with 1 vote. The ITO will meet each year to distribute among themselves the remaining production and markets of the world.

It is impossible to discuss one of these parts without bringing in the other two, says MALONE, because they belong together.

"The ultimate objective," MALONE charges, "is to level our living standards with the rest of the world. Of course this is done with the announced objective of raising the standard of living of the remainder of the world by dividing our markets with them."

I believe Alf Landon raised the same point in the earliest discussions of the Marshall program. After we have supplied Europe with up-to-date machinery (paid for largely by us) and given them the know-how to operate it, then what will we do when their products start flooding our own markets and displacing our own manufacturers in our own markets?

I do not believe myself, my friends, that we can laugh off the answer to this question. Right now, except for a few lines such as watches and clothespins and such, Europe's industries are not sending us goods that undersell our own production in sufficient quantities to be noticeable. But they still are short in meeting their own needs.

But our British statesmen are making no bones about it. Whenever the Marshall plan aid ceases flowing to Britain they expect our American markets to take enough of their British manufactured goods to more than make up the loss of Marshall plan funds.

"All this reminds me," comments Senator MALONE, "of someone trying to average the level of the water in a water glass and the city reservoir. You could empty the entire contents of the water glass into the city reservoir without much effect on the reservoir, but what it would do to your glass of water.

"I simply want to emphasize at this point," I still am quoting Senator MALONE, "that if this free-trade plan is to continue and the American worker is to be put in direct competition with the low-wage labor of the Asiatic and European nations and the South Sea—

"Then there is nothing that can happen to us except a definite lowering of our high-wage standard of living.

"It simply means that approximately 7 percent of the population of the world (our 150,000,000 people) is trying to raise the standard of living of the 93 percent (more than 2,000,000,000 people) through a direct division of jobs with them."

I think I get Senator MALONE's point. In fact I believe I have expressed myself, not once but many times, the conclusion that 7 percent of the world's population cannot level off standards of living with 93 percent except by greatly lowering our own standard of living without greatly lifting theirs.

Just a homely illustration, which I believe I have used before. Say that our people average a diet that measures out about 3,300 calories. The average of the rest of the world is 2,000 calories. If all were dumped into a common pool—equalized under a one-world arrangement of some sort—here is what would happen. The average would be 2,091 calories. In other words, to give the other peoples of the world an additional 91 calories each, our people would be cut down from 3,300 to 2,091 calories.

Maybe that is what ought to happen. But do you want it to happen to you?

I say there is food for a lot of real thought in the protest of Kansas-born Senator MALONE against the United States swallowing all three of these world-help proposals—trade agreements, Marshall plan, and International Trade Organization control of our foreign trade—without doing some serious thinking whether or not we can digest all three and ever look the same again.

This ITO business, I might add, has me greatly worried. It has been sold to many leaders and organizations, but so far as I can learn, without ever being explained. Except that it has a worthy, do-good objective, and is the best the State Department can suggest to attain that worthy, do-good objective.

As nearly as I can figure, once the Senate approves it as a treaty, the United States gives to some 57 or so other nations the authority to tell the United States how much and to whom it shall export goods; how much and from whom it shall import goods, and, in case our exports are larger than our imports, what steps we shall take in our own country and in our own economy, to balance our exports and imports. The decision of the governing council of ITO, and of the ITO assembly, will be made by majority vote—and we will have just one vote when the rolls are called.

Frankly, I do not have that much faith in human nature. Have you?

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, if we extend the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act for 3 years, I predict that within 60 to 90 days following the passage of the bill England, France, the Netherlands, and many other nations will substantially lower the price of their currency and come under any agreement they have made up to that date.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the unfinished business is known as the reciprocal trade-agreements legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. May I ask the distinguished majority leader if it is not now the intention to bring up Calendar No. 284, Senate bill 1008, a bill to provide a 2-year moratorium with respect to the application of certain antitrust laws to individual good-faith delivered-price systems and freight absorption practices. It was my impression several days ago that after the so-called unification bill was disposed of and the central intelligence bill was completed, the Senate might consider this bill.

I have a deep feeling that this is one of the most important pieces of legislation that will come before the Senate. One may classify legislation as major and minor if he so desires. In my opinion, this is one of the most important pieces of legislation, in whichever class one may place it, that will come before the Senate.

As I have told the distinguished majority leader on many occasions, I have received innumerable letters from small-business men all over the country demanding that the confusion which now exists in freight rates because of the Supreme Court decision be clarified. This situation applies to all classes of producers, in addition to cement and steel producers. Literally scores of producers and fabricators need to know where they stand, for at least a period, so that business can again be conducted in an orderly fashion.

I do not wish to make a speech at this time in favor of consideration of the bill. I point out that it is an important piece of legislation. I know that there are two sides to the question. As a rule all questions have two sides, and there will be some debate. I submit to the distinguished majority leader that I feel that if that measure were made the pending business, there is every hope that by Tuesday the bill would be in such shape that with very little debate on the following day we might be able to reach a determination one way or the other.

I would deeply appreciate it if the distinguished majority leader could see his way clear to make the bill to which I refer the pending business, displacing the unfinished business, which is the reciprocal trade-agreements legislation.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I know how interested the distinguished Senator from Nebraska has been in the so-called basing-point measure.

I also am aware of the interest of the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS], who is the author of the moratorium bill. Unfortunately, the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania was called out of the city today. As a result of that situation, I deemed it not to be in the best interests of the basing-point bill to have it taken up now.

Furthermore, as the distinguished Senator from Nebraska knows, on yesterday at the close of the session we were discussing the basing-point bill, insofar as the future program of the Senate was concerned. It was understood at that time that the Senator from Pennsylvania, and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], were attempting to compose their differences as to that bill by means of some kind of an amendment to it. The Senator from Pennsylvania left word in my office that because the Senator from Wyoming was unusually busy with the handling of appropriations, it was impossible for them to get together and agree upon any amendments to the bill; and the Senator from Pennsylvania thought it would be best if perhaps we could take up the home-rule bill, and give them an opportunity, perhaps on Tuesday and Wednesday, to work out the difficulties in connection with the basing-point bill.

I can assure the distinguished Senator from Nebraska that, following the action of the Senate on the home-rule bill, we shall take up the basing-point bill; and the only reason I am asking that the home-rule bill be taken up now is in view of what seems to be a slight misunderstanding between the two able Senators

I have previously named, the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, in view of the statement of the Senator from Illinois that when the Senate completes its action on the home-rule bill the basing-point bill will be made the unfinished business—and, of course, I understand that, in making that statement, it is the intention of the Senator from Illinois that that be done, subject, of course, to the will of the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. Yes; that is the intention.

Mr. WHERRY. If that is the situation, I wish to go on record as not desiring to interfere in any way with the program arranged by the majority. But my opinion is that the home-rule bill will take longer to handle than is anticipated. I am quite sure that if either the home-rule bill or the basing-point bill is made the unfinished business at the end of the session today, the Senate's action on it will not be completed before Wednesday.

So, again I submit to the distinguished Senator from Illinois, the majority leader, that the basing-point bill, which I am asking to have taken up now, is of much more importance, country-wide, than the home-rule bill, although in making that statement I am not saying anything in any way disparaging of the home-rule bill.

However, I wish to point out that—no doubt because I formerly was chairman of the Special Committee on Small Business, which since has been terminated—I am still receiving considerable numbers of letters in which action on the moratorium bill, the basing-point bill, is requested. It is clear that in the interest of business, the sooner the Senate takes up that bill, the better it will be.

Of course, if the Senator from Illinois is definitely of the opinion that the course he has suggested is the best way to expedite Senate action on the basing-point bill, I shall not press my request further. However, my opinion is that regardless of which bill is made the unfinished business at this time, we shall still go into Tuesday or Wednesday before action on either bill is completed.

So I hope that nothing which may be done by the Senate will result in causing Senate bill 1008, Calendar No. 284, not to receive the consideration which it must receive. I sincerely hope that the action of the Senate in regard to all other pieces of proposed legislation which I know the majority leader has already announced will be brought up for consideration by the Senate in the very immediate future, will not prevent Senate bill 1008 from receiving the consideration it must receive.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I am sure the able Senator from Nebraska will not object to having numerous small-business people and numerous large-business people throughout the country continue to write him letters for a few more days. I know that the distinguished Senator from Nebraska has the office personnel and office capacity to answer all such letters, and I am sure it will be good for him to receive a few more letters from such people throughout the United States.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the Senator from Illinois mean that it will be good for me to keep up my contacts with such persons?

Mr. LUCAS. Yes; contacts with the "big fellows."

Mr. WHERRY. No; I have in mind the "little fellows."

Mr. LUCAS. Yes; I know the Senator from Nebraska will "stay with the little fellows," regardless.

But, Mr. President, under the circumstances, I feel that we should proceed to the consideration of the home-rule bill. After that bill is acted upon, I say to the Senator from Nebraska—of course, I cannot guarantee it, but I am almost positive of this—that we shall bring up the basing-point bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well. Of course the Senate itself must decide the matter, in the final analysis.

But if the Senator from Illinois says he will attempt to have the basing-point bill brought up, that suits me.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I wish to assure the distinguished majority leader that, inasmuch as I have filed minority views on Senate bill 1008, I hope it will not be brought up in the Senate until the Senator from Wyoming can be present. He has been over the matter with me several times.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from North Dakota is referring to the basing-point bill, of course.

Mr. LANGER. Yes. I hope that bill will not be taken up by the Senate until the Senator from Wyoming is present.

HOME RULE FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. LUCAS. I am very happy to know that the Senator from North Dakota and I are together on this matter, at least this afternoon.

Mr. President, of course the unfinished business is the Reciprocal Trade Act extension bill, House bill 1211. I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate temporarily lay aside House bill 1211, and proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1527, Calendar No. 250, a bill to provide for home rule and reorganization in the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1527, Calendar No. 250.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Of course such a motion, if carried, will displace the measure which is now the unfinished business.

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. RUSSELL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I join the Senator from Georgia in suggesting the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Capehart	Holland	Millikin
Chapman	Ives	Neely
Chavez	Johnson, Colo.	O'Conor
Connally	Johnson, Tex.	Pepper
Cordon	Johnston, S. C.	Robertson
Donnell	Kefauver	Russell
Douglas	Kem	Schoeppel
Downey	Kerr	Smith, Maine
Eastland	Knowland	Sparkman
Ecton	Langer	Stennis
Ellender	Long	Taft
Ferguson	Lucas	Taylor
Flanders	McCarthy	Thomas, Utah
Frear	McClellan	Thye
Gillette	McFarland	Tydings
Gurney	McKellar	Wherry
Hayden	McMahon	Wiley
Hendrickson	Magnuson	Withers
Hill	Martin	Young

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois to proceed to the consideration of Calendar 250, Senate bill 1527, the District home-rule bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, once again, before the motion goes to a vote, I desire to make my position clear. I had already asked the majority leader whether he could not see his way clear to make Calendar 284, Senate bill 1008, the unfinished business. He stated that the Senator in charge of the bill was out of town and would be out of town until Tuesday. My reply to the distinguished majority leader was, "It does not make any difference to me whether one bill is taken up or the other inasmuch as it seems the consideration of either one could not be completed today and would necessarily be carried over until next Tuesday, anyway." The distinguished majority leader said, "If that became the unfinished business, the Senator from Wyoming and the Senator from Pennsylvania might agree on certain amendments that would be offered, which would be acceptable to them." I did not object to the consideration of the home-rule bill, and I know the record will bear me out, but if it comes to a question of whether we should take up the home-rule bill or the basing-point bill, I much prefer to take up the basing-point bill, because I think it is important legislation. I am not going to ask any Senator to support my position in the matter, but I want the Vice President to know that even though I went along with the majority leader, and want to do so now, yet I feel that the basing-point bill should be made the unfinished business, if it comes to a choice between the two bills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion cannot be made to substitute the basing-point bill for the District government bill.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand that. That is the reason I wanted to give my explanation, because, if it comes to a decision as to which of the two bills is to be taken up, I am in favor of taking up the basing-point bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois to proceed to the consideration of the so-called District government home-rule bill.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to invite the attention of the Senate at this time to the fact that the bill is being called up without notice having been given. Several Senators who are now absent are very much interested in the bill. I know my colleague from South Carolina would like to be present when the bill is discussed. I object to having it brought up at this time, without the Senate's having had notice in advance.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, let me say to the able Senator from South Carolina that there will be no vote upon the home rule bill or upon any amendment to it this afternoon. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] is anxious to present his case in behalf of the bill, and perhaps other Senators will speak upon it, and we can make a start on home rule for the District of Columbia. It is nearly 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and the Senator from Illinois does not feel that the Senate should adjourn until Tuesday without starting to consider this bill.

Let me say to the distinguished Senator from Nebraska that we cannot take up the basing point bill in the absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania with whom I have an agreement not to take it up today. I think that bill will be considered following the home rule bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I hope the distinguished majority leader will not give the impression that the basing point bill will not be taken up soon. I understood, when I withdrew my objection to the consideration of the home rule bill—and I am certainly satisfied to go along with the program of the Senator from Illinois this afternoon—that the basing point bill would be the next one the majority leader would suggest be brought up. Of course, the Senate has to approve.

Mr. LUCAS. Obviously, the Senator from Nebraska is correct. I told him definitely, in the colloquy I had with him, that insofar as the Senator from Illinois was concerned, while he could not definitely guarantee it, the hope was that the basing point bill could be brought up in a short time. There are many Senators vitally interested in it. I know the Senator from Nebraska is interested in it. I hope it will be taken up following consideration of the home rule bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion to proceed to the consideration of the home rule bill.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to state to the Senate that in looking over the calendar it seems to me there are many bills which are not so controversial as is this particular bill, and the Senate could consider some of them and dispose of them, without starting today consideration of the home-rule bill, which is so controversial that I do not think it is proper to start consideration of it on a Friday afternoon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion to consider the District of Columbia home-rule bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1527) to provide for home rule and reorganization in the District of Columbia.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to the bill. I offer it on behalf of myself and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, this is a momentous day for the District of Columbia. For the first time in nearly three-quarters of a century, the Senate is taking up for consideration a bill granting home rule to the residents of the District of Columbia.

We who are citizens of the States—citizens of the United States—like to think of Washington, the Nation's Capital, as the center of world democracy. It is the Capital of the democratic world. The free people of the world now look to the United States and to Washington, its Capital City, for moral as well as material support in these trying times.

This city of Washington—the District of Columbia—has now a population of almost 1,000,000 inhabitants. The population of the District of Columbia is approximately as great as the combined populations of Nevada, Wyoming, and Montana. The state of literacy is the highest of any place in the United States, the people of District of Columbia have a broad cultural background, and yet, so far as citizenship is concerned, they exist in a twilight zone.

We are constantly talking about the right of free peoples to have a say in their own affairs, and yet, insofar as I know, this is the only great city in the democratic world where people do not have suffrage.

Senate bill 1527 in providing local self-government for the District of Columbia, restores to District citizens a type of government which the Congress established soon after the District was created, and which prevailed for three-quarters of a century.

It was in 1790, 3 years after the Constitution was agreed upon and signed, that Congress decided to locate on the Potomac the seat of the United States Government, defined in the Constitution only as a district not exceeding 10 miles square, to be secured by Congress by cession from the States. At the same time Congress accepted the cession by Maryland and Virginia of the respective parts of their territories needed to form the Federal District, it decided that the Government should move to such district in 1800, 10 years later, and provided that the laws and governing units of Maryland and Virgina would continue in effect within the District of Columbia until Congress ruled otherwise.

Thus for a 10-year period immediately following the creation of the District of Columbia, Congress delegated to the Legislatures of Maryland and Virginia the authority to legislate for the District, a delegation which was considered by Congress to be entirely consistent with the provision in the Constitution that Congress shall have the power to exercise exclusive legislation over the Federal District. This action by Congress carried out the principles set forth in Madison's Federalist paper, No. XLIII—the only elaboration of this particular article of the Constitution—in which Madison stated that the draftsmen of the Constitution did not intend to deprive the citizens of the Federal District of the right to elect "a municipal legislature for local purposes."

In this connection, it must be remembered that to the framers of the Constitution the term "exclusive legislative authority" meant an authority independent of any of the States, and not necessarily an authority which Congress itself must exercise without delegation. This is traceable to an incident which occurred in 1783 when the Continental Congress was meeting temporarily in Philadelphia. A group of soldiers of the Continental Army mutinied and converged on the Congress to demand back pay. The Continental Congress appealed to the State of Pennsylvania for protection, but the State authorities declined on the ground that the Philadelphia militia would not fight unless some "outrage" occurred. As a result, the soldiers poked their muskets through the windows of the chamber in which Congress was sitting and disrupted its deliberations. Congress immediately adjourned to a safer location, in Princeton, N. J., and it was there, in a debate on the location of a permanent capital, that the first reference was made to granting Congress exclusive authority over the new Capital. By this it was clearly meant that the States should surrender jurisdiction over the Federal site to Congress in order to avoid a repetition of the indignity which Congress suffered in Philadelphia.

When the Government moved to its new Capital in 1800 it was necessary for Congress to make a further decision regarding the government of the District, since the 10-year period during which it was governed by the laws of Maryland and Virginia was about to expire. A bill calling for complete assumption by Congress of the government of the District, acting through executive officers appointed by the President, was rejected chiefly because of the clamor from local residents that such a measure would disenfranchise them. A territorial government, with an elected legislature and an appointed executive, was considered, but in view of the complexity of the problem Congress fell back on what was essentially a continuation of the existing system.

The law of February 27, 1801, whatever its limitations, set the basic pattern for District government for the next seventy-odd years. The District was divided into two counties separated by the Potomac; the laws of Maryland and Virginia, then in existence, were continued in effect, and the further legislative authority of the States within the District was ended; the municipal governments of Georgetown and Alexandria, which included a council and a mayor elected by the voters, were continued; and a Federal court system was established. The city of Washington, the only part of the District without adequate governmental machinery, was granted a corporate charter by Congress the following year, 1802.

This charter provided for a twelve-member elected council and a mayor appointed by the President, who had a veto power over the actions of the council. In 1811, the members of the council were given the right to pick their own mayor, and in 1820 the charter was amended to permit the mayor to be elected by the people. This form of government continued until 1871, without substantial change.

I call the attention of Senators to the fact that in the Congress at the time the law of 1802 was passed sat many, as Members of the House of Representatives and of the Senate, who had been members of the constitutional convention, and they raised no objection to the constitutionality of giving residents of the District the right to vote, or of delegating to the people of the District of Columbia the right of self-government.

Early in the history of the District, Congress realized that fiscal matters played an important part in the relationship between the Federal and District governments. The transfer of the Federal Government to the District of Columbia entailed additional expenses of a national rather than a local character, and local tax rates had steadily increased since the establishment of the Federal Government in Washington.

Congress quickly accepted responsibility for paving for streets fronting public property, but the appropriations seem to have been insufficient for the purpose. In 1822 Senator Eaton, of Tennessee, finding Pennsylvania Avenue impassable for horse or foot, called on Congress to bear the burden of maintaining United States property. In 1836 Congress for the first time appropriated money to be used by the District for a nongovernmental purpose when it assumed certain canal debts incurred by the municipalities of Washington, Georgetown, and Alexandria. Ten years later, when Alexandria again experienced financial difficulties because of the failure of the canal project, Congress quickly acceded to the petition of Virginia to restore Alexandria to that State.

In 1868 the current charter of Washington was due to expire, and Congress was once more required to face the difficult problem of District government. Two alternatives were considered: a territorial form of government with an elected legislature and an appointed governor, and a commission form of government with the three appointed commissioners and no elected officials. The issue was a thorny one, particularly because some of the substantial District residents, dissatisfied with the universal male suffrage which Congress had imposed on the District 3 years before, favored the commission form of government. In the end Congress avoided a decision and extended the existing charter.

By 1871, however, it became essential to give the District a more modern and efficient government, capable of providing overcrowded Washington with adequate streets, sewers, and other public improvements so that it could become a capital city of which no citizen need be ashamed. To do this job, Congress swept away the outdated system of municipalities and established a territorial government for the entire District. The government consisted of a legislative assembly, a 22-member House of Delegates, elected by the people and an 11-member council appointed by the President, a Governor, and a Board of Public Works, both appointed by the President. The District was also granted an elected delegate to Congress. The law establishing the new government also contained increased recognition of the obligation of Congress to appropriate funds for the District, and even provided for a 5-year assessment of the value of property owned by the Federal Government.

The first Governor appointed by President Grant was Henry Cooke; but Alexander Shepherd, a member of the Board of Public Works, actually dominated the new government and succeeded Cooke as Governor in 1873. Within the space of 3 years Shepherd completed much of the public-works program which the Territorial government was expected to achieve. In so doing however, he built up a staggering debt. Congress quickly became dissatisfied with the Territorial government, although realizing that, whatever the change, Congress would in the future have to share financial responsibility for the District.

All of these factors combined to make a difficult problem more difficult, and, as usual, Congress was unable to agree on more than a temporary solution. In 1874, near the end of its session, Congressed passed—and purely as a stopgap—a law which abolished the Territorial government and provided for three appointed Commissioners, to act as receivers of a District threatened with bankruptcy. This measure, which abolished suffrage completely, was intended only as an emergency measure. Nevertheless, in 1878 Congress made permanent the commission form of government as the most available solution to an extremely complex problem. To District residents the only compensating feature of this legislation was that Congress agreed, as a necessary corollary of its complete assumption of the District government, that the United States should contribute one-half of the expenses of the District.

This stopgap measure is still in force today, with the exception of the 50–50 formula for expenses, which was abandoned, despite continued Federal control, in favor of a lump-sum appropriation which has ranged from 12 to 32 percent of total District expenses. Meanwhile, the District of Columbia has grown to such an extent that its population is greater than that of 14 States, and, in spite of the principle of no taxation without representation, for the year ending June 30, 1947, more Federal income taxes were collected in the District of Columbia than in each of 37 States.

The charter of 1878, in the light of present day needs is entirely inadequate. The District Government has grown by leaps and bounds since 1878 without coordination, or any clear plan of departmental organization. From half a dozen units of government it has grown to more than four score governmental units rendering service to the people of the District.

A policy arrived at by the Commissioners can be fully effective only over those agencies over which they have complete control. If Members of the Senate will examine the chart in the back of the report they will find that it presents graphically the present perplexing system of dual control, there being more than 110 or 111 different departments or divisions or agencies in the District of Columbia. On the following page is set forth the organizational chart showing the system that would be put into effect upon the passage of the pending bill.

For example, the Commissioners have full control over only 26 agencies, among which are the Health Department, the Collector of Taxes, the Fire Department, the Police Department, the Office of the Assessor, the Office of the Sanitary Engineer, and the Office of Vehicles and Traffic. They have administrative control over 16 agencies, among which are Public Welfare, Education, Public Utilities, Zoning, and Recreation. They have budgetary control over eight agencies, four of which are controlled by either the Department of Interior, War Department, or the Smithsonian Institution. There are 14 agencies over which the Commissioners have audit control only.

It can readily be seen that the Commissioners have effective control over only a small segment of the local government.

Lines of responsibility and control are obscure and confused. Piecemeal changes have been made often with little consideration for existing services, sound organization, or integration of procedures and methods. From such haphazard development there has inevitably resulted a multiplication and overlapping of services. This has brought about a lack of centralized responsibility and effective administration with unnecessary duplication, conflicts in authority, inconveniences, and injustices to residents and taxpayers.

The division of responsibility within the District Government is marked by the division of local services between District and Federal agencies. This results in maintenance of duplicate facilities and overhead staff, in budgetary confusion, and in decentralized control, especially in the departments administering the police, water supply, road building, recreation, and health facilities.

Great advances have been made in recent decades in local government throughout the United States. However, the form of the District Government has undergone no material change since 1878. Various boards, commissions, and other units have been added or abolished from time to time, but every time there is a snarl, Congress must take the time and make the effort; but more often adds "confoundment to confusion." Until today there has been no major effort to development an integrated plan of government with sharpened lines of executive responsibility and centralized authority.

Senate bill 1527 is an integrated plan to provide a solution to this unhappy state of affairs in the Nation's Capital.

Since 1940 the Democratic platforms have included home rule. In 1948 the Democratic and Republican platforms included home rule. The Democratic platform in 1948 read: We favor the extension of the right of suffrage to the people of the District of Columbia. The Republican platform read: We favor self-government for the residents of the Nation's Capital.

The form of government in the District of Columbia has been the subject of study for many years and the conclusion reached in most of the studies is that the government of the District is cumbersome, complicated, and confused. The Bureau of Efficiency so reported in its study covering a period of 12 years, 1921 to 1933. The Brookings Institution in 1928 and 1929 conducted a careful survey and published a book under the authorship of Dr. Laurence F. Schmeckebier and W. F. Willoughby with the same conclusions. The Economy Committee in 1934, the Jacobs Committee in 1936, the Citizens' Efficiency Committee in 1937 and the Griffenhagen and Associates Report in 1939, all agreed that the District Government was complicated and should be thoroughly overhauled and revised in the interest of efficiency. Then there was the Auchincloss Committee in the House of Representatives, with a staff headed by Dr. George Galloway, and Mr. Pierce, his assistant, which devoted more than 12 months to an exhaustive study, and arrived at the same conclusion.

We have had the benefit of all these studies and reports, and especially that of the Auchincloss committee, which did a monumental work, and the report of that committee and its hearings have formed the background of the legislation we are presenting today. This bill offers a progressive and thoroughly workable program for administrative reform and local self rule.

I point out that in the House of Representatives, in the last session, because of the crowded condition on the calendar, the Auchincloss bill, to which this bill is quite similar, never got to a final vote, but every vote that was taken was to sustain the bill. In the Senate the bill has had a very thorough consideration by the subcommittee and by the full committee. I am happy to say that the bill has bipartisan support of a number of the members of the District Committee of the Senate. The bill has been improved in a good many respects upon suggestions of the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] and by other Members of the Senate who have introduced bills on the subject, and who have been interested in home rule and suffrage for a number of years. Moreover, the Democratic organization, the Republican organization, business and civic organizations in the District of Columbia have been sponsoring and working for home rule over a period of a number of years. They have given the committee many valuable suggestions, many of which have been incorporated in the bill, and I feel that the active support they have given, the zeal with which they are working for home rule, and the widespread demand for suffrage, will certainly insure that, insofar as the people of the District of Columbia are concerned, this city, Washington, will, upon the enactment of the bill, has as efficient, interested, progressive, thoughtful, and economic government as any city in the United States.

There is a general grant of legislative power to the Council from the Congress. We have some charts which I shall ask to have placed on the easel, so Senators may see them. In the bill it is provided, however, that any legislative proposal passed by the Council, other than ordinances and provisions which the Board of Commissioners can now make, shall be deposited with the Congress, and shall remain before the Congress for a period of 45 calendar days of continuous session. During such time any legislative proposal may be vetoed by concurrent resolution of the two Houses. If there is no veto, the proposal is then sent to the President, who may, as in the case of other legislation, disapprove it within 10 days; otherwise it shall become law.

These are the provisions of the bill which raise the question of the power of Congress to grant legislative authority to a governing body for the District. The grant which the bill makes is similar to that which the Congress has made on several occasions to Territories of the United States.

I may say at this point that the Territories have been very successful in operating through their local governments which Congress authorized them to put into effect. They file their legislative proposals with Congress, but I am advised that no legislative proposal filed with the respective committees by the territorial governments has ever been modified or repealed. We have allowed them to go into effect because they know their problems better than we can keep up with them here. Such grants of power to territorial legislatures are no longer open to debate. They have frequently been upheld by the Supreme Court as being proper delegations of authority.

I may say there is no substantial difference between the power Congress retains over the District of Columbia and that which it necessarily retains over the Territories under article 4, section 3, clause 2 of the Constitution.

In connection with sustaining the legislative grant to the Territories I cite the cases of Sere v. Pitot (6 C. R. 322), Miners' Bank v. Iowa (12 Iowa 1), Simms v. Simms (175 U. S. 162), Christianson v. King County (229 U. S. 356).

Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] desires to make a statement on another matter. If it will not disturb the legislative situation, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to yield to him for the purpose of making a statement, without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my remarks may appear at the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Tennessee, so as to avoid interrupting its continuity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(Mr. FERGUSON'S remarks appear following Mr. KEFAUVER's speech.)

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, let us examine the provisions of the bill which the House committee, the Senate committee, and almost all the organizations that have been interested in home rule join in unanimously recommending for passage by the Senate. The bill provides for an 11-member council, 9 of whom are to be elected, with 2 to be appointed by the President; and an elected 7-member Board of Education. These representatives are to be elected in November of odd-numbered years for staggered 4-year terms. Members of the council will receive a salary of $5,000 a year, except the Chairman, who will receive $7,500. He would be the titular head of the District government. It is not contemplated that the work of the council will take all the time of its members. The members of the council are to serve as a sort of board of directors of the District of Columbia.

The council will select from among its membership a Chairman, who will be the presiding officer of the council and the official spokesman for the District of Columbia.

The council will have the power to enact ordinances on local subjects, to enact legislative proposals, to adopt a District budget, and to appoint a District manager.

The School Board will choose its president, formulate educational policies, administer vocational rehabilitation, and appoint a superintendent of schools.

The bill authorizes the District council to appoint, compensate, and remove a District manager. It defines his powers and duties as chief administrative officer of the District government.

First adopted by Staunton, Va., in 1908, the manager plan has now spread to 876 American cities and towns. This, then, is a modern, progressive form of local administration designed to secure the services of a technician to solve the highly complicated problems of present-day local government.

Modeled on the internal structure of the private business corporation, it is recognized as the most progressive form of city government America has produced.

The city manager will be a trained and experienced administrator whose role is that of business manager of the public corporation, in which the governing board is the Council and the electors are the stockholders. He will be appointed by the Council for an indefinite term on the basis of ability and is removable by the Council.

The manager will have authority to appoint all the department heads, supervise and discipline employees, and prepare the annual budget.

He will attend meetings of the Council to make recommendations, give advice, answer questions, and meet criticism. In effect, he will direct the entire city administration under the constant control and supervision of the Council.

Under the manager plan there is unification of powers in the Council, but a separation of functions as between the Council and the manager. The Council formulates local policies and enacts them; the manager and the departments execute these policies.

Senate bill 1527 creates 12 departments of the District Government, each headed by a director appointed and removable by the manager, at salaries to be fixed by the Council. It consolidates more than 100 scattered local governmental agencies along functional lines into these 12 departments: Health, Welfare, Recreation, Public Safety, Finance, Law, Public Works, Libraries, Labor, Commerce, Corrections, and Occupational and Professional Standards.

The bill authorizes department heads to reorganize their departments internally, with the manager's approval, and to create or abolish offices or positions therein.

The bill provides for a five-member board of elections, appointed by the President, with the consent of the Senate, to conduct permanent registration of voters and nonpartisan elections. The first elections would be held March 7, 1950, and thereafter in November of odd-numbered years.

Qualified electors would be United States citizens, 21 years old, resident or domiciled in the District of Columbia for 1 year, mentally competent and not convicted of felony. It is estimated that 650,000 persons would thus be enabled to vote in the District.

Only District domiciliaries could run for office and should have the same qualifications as qualified electors. Nomination shall be by petition signed by 90 qualified electors. A filing fee will be required of all candidates—$30 for the Council, $25 for School Board.

All elections will be at large and by plurality vote.

Under the bill, qualified electors need not surrender legal domiciles elsewhere. A progressive feature of the bill is that it makes it possible for qualified electors in the District of Columbia who have maintained a voting residence elsewhere, to vote both in the District elections and in their home State elections. No person, however, would be voting twice for the same person for the same office. In the States, he would vote for candidates for State and Federal office. In the District he would vote for candidates for the District Council and the Board of Education.

The purpose of this dual voting plan is to recognize that State domiciliaries resident here have a stake in the District, thus broadening the electorate and improving its quality. It avoids disenfranchisement of one-third of the potential voters.

A survey conducted in 1948 showed that 32 Governors favored the dual voting plan. The State of Maryland permits it. Other State constitutions and election laws do not forbid it.

Since the beginning of the history of the District of Columbia, the Federal Government has made an annual contribution to the cost of the District Government. From 1878, the year in which the present charter was passed by Congress, to 1921, the annual Federal contribution amounted to 50 percent of the cost of the District Government. It was a lump-sum contribution. From 1921 to 1925 the Federal Government contributed 40 percent of the cost of the local Government. Since 1925, the Federal contribution has been on a lump-sum basis and has ranged from five to twelve million dollars a year. At the present time it is $12,000,000 a year.

The bill establishes a simple, clear, fair, and automatic method of determining the Federal payment for general support of the District. Instead of the lump sum which has been contributed each year since 1925, our bill provides a formula by which the Federal Government will contribute an amount equal to 20 cents for each dollar of locally derived District revenues during the preceding year. In other words, it gives an incentive to the people of the District to raise money by local taxation, because, for every dollar they raise under this formula, they will receive 20 cents from the Federal Government.

The appropriation of such amount is authorized in the bill so that the District may anticipate, for budgetary purposes, its revenues from Federal sources.

Do the people want it? This bill provides that the government shall not perform until the people have voted "yes" in an official referendum held for this purpose. In unofficial referenda, of which there have been several, it can be safely stated that the people who voted favored home rule. But I must add that the vote was not specifically on any particular type of government. But that they wanted the right of suffrage and home rule has been indicated in every one of these unofficial referenda. For what it may be worth, in a Gallup poll taken last year, 77 percent of all the people, Democrats and Republicans, in all sections of the country, North and South, approved this measure.

The charter would become effective only after approval by a majority of District voters in the referendum. Of course, this form of self-government can be rejected by the people of the District by referendum if they so desire.

A cursory reading of the hearings over the past two decades clearly indicates that the citizens, of their own free will, organized into groups for the distinct purpose of promoting home rule.

Adequate safeguards of Federal interests are assured by constant supervision of District affairs by the District Committees of both Houses of Congress, by the power of Congress to disapprove District legislation by concurrent legislation, by the power of the President to veto District legislation, and the right of Congress to annul or amend the charter at any time.

Home rule should be established not only as a matter of privilege, in the interest of adequacy and representative government, and not only because our Capital City would be better governed, but—and this is important—it would relieve the Congress of a great burden. Under our present system, committees of Congress act in the capacity of members of the board of aldermen or city council. We all know Members of Congress are so busy wrestling with problems of national and international importance that it seems unfair to impose this responsibility on Members of Congress. Only recently we devoted nearly a full week to discussion and enactment of the revenue bill for the District, which included the sales tax, while legislation of great magnitude was piling up on the calendar. We also considered a bill to provide for disposal of weeds and grass which had grown more than 4 inches in height.

In 1943, appearing before the Subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee in the Seventy-eighth Congress on House bill 2620, a bill to provide for a Delegate from the District to the House of Representatives, Justice Harold H. Burton of the Supreme Court, then a Member of the United States Senate from Ohio, a former mayor of Cleveland, and a recognized authority in the field of government, had this to say:

> It is obvious that we cannot as a Congress perform adequately and fully the duties of a city council. Congress is just too large to be a good city council. No city council would organize itself with a membership of 531 members. It just would not be conceivable. This is a handicap with which we start.

Even in 1871 the growing complexities attendant upon the District were recognized as being unduly burdensome upon the Congress, in its capacity as the real governing body for the District. The remarks of Senator Hamlin, the Senator from Maine at that time, read as though they had been spoken only yesterday. Let me quote a paragraph from his speech during the discussion of the bill to provide a government for the District of Columbia, which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE of January 23, 1871:

> Having been connected with the bill which originally passed the Senate at the last session, I desire to say that I regard the whole thing as an experiment, and it was in that view that the bill was originally passed; but I have great faith that it will prove to be a successful experiment. It is found utterly impossible to have accomplished in Congress the requisite legislation for the District. There are so many public measures pressing upon the attention of Senators and Representatives, demanding their time and investigation, that they have not the time to devote that attention to the affairs of the District of Columbia which the District requires and demands. Such is the practical effect, as every Senator knows.

It does not make sense to have Members of Congress give thought and time to matters of local importance which could be better handled by an elected council.

This bill affords the Congress an opportunity to relieve itself of much of this burden of local legislation and at the same time it restores to the residents of the District the privilege of an elected, representative local government.

GERHART EISLER

(By unanimous consent, the following remarks by Mr. FERGUSON, delivered during the course of Mr. KEFAUVER'S speech, were ordered to be transposed to this point in the RECORD:)

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, a very disturbing news report came from England today. I refer to the reported decision of the Bow Street Court, in London, denying the extradition to the United States of Gerhart Eisler. It is disturbing because of its effect on international relations, which, of course, are political as well as legal relations.

Ordinarily this case would be a simple matter of criminal extradition; but it seems that it has been considered by many to be different from the ordinary extradition. I wish to make a few remarks on this subject at this time, because I think it is pertinent to what we were discussing earlier today on the floor of the Senate, namely, the central intelligence bill.

Mr. President, I think we should try to analyze this case and find out what has happened. First, we must analyze the treaty between America and Great Britain under which this extradition could be had. Incidentally we might look at the bail-bond circumstances. When a man flees a bond the common law is very clear that the bondsman is in a position to go anywhere—even across national lines or State lines—to apprehend the fugitive and to return and surrender him in place of the bond, no extradition being necessary.

In this particular case it is very significant that the bond which was put up for Gerhart Eisler's appearance in court consisted of $20,000 worth of Government bonds. It is also significant that the bond was put up by an organization which has been listed by the Attorney General as a subversive agency, that is, a Communist-front organization. It being claimed that Mr. Eisler was the No. 1 Communist in America, it would not be surprising that the organization which put up the bond, having the character which has been stated, would not be interested in bringing him back and surrendering him to save the $20,000. I have heard no claim from the bondsmen that they are interested in bringing Mr. Eisler back. They seem satisfied to forfeit the $20,000.

Another significant point is that Mr. Eisler was in fact at liberty on two bonds, one in connection with alleged contempt of the House of Representatives, when he refused to be sworn or to answer questions, and the other in connection with a perjury case. But the Government bonds which were put up in connection with the contempt charge were the same as those which were put up in connection with the perjury charge, or the charge of false swearing, which I shall discuss later. So, instead of the Government getting $40,000 upon the forfeiture of the bonds, the United States Government gets only $20,000.

Now, let us consider what the decision of the English court means to the people of the United States. Eisler has been released and is a free man at the present time, free to go his way. The treaty provides for extradition in cases of perjury or subornation of perjury. Under the common law perjury is defined to be willful false swearing on a material fact in a judicial proceeding; but, in addition to the common law, many other statutes have been enacted, both in England and in America, dealing with the crime of perjury. The situation is similar to burglary. Under the common-law definition of burglary, a person had to do the breaking and entering at night, with intent to commit a felony. We have enacted burglary statutes to deal with burglary in the daytime. All such crimes are called burglary, without distinction.

In England, as in America, there are such kindred statutes, as they are called.

In the United States we have three laws under which Eisler could have been prosecuted: (1) He could have been prosecuted for false swearing in connection with his exit permit or false swearing in relation to the immigration laws. This was the charge on which he actually was convicted. (2) He could have been charged with perjury under the perjury statute, because the agency before which he has sworn was a quasi judicial agency. (3) He could have been charged with a violation of the immigration law.

Great Britain has similar statutes. For example, there is an English statute covering perjury or false swearing before Government boards in connection with applications for aid or for grants, or for permission to do something. The charge against Eisler was that of false swearing in connection with his emigration or exit permit.

Every element involved in a perjury charge, under the words of the treaty, was alleged and proved against Eisler on the charge of false swearing in connection with his exit permit. A fair construction of the law should then have included it within the treaty provision.

Section 9 of the treaty must be considered in this connection. The treaty makes it necessary to establish two things before a person can be extradited. One of them is the identity of the person. There is no question about the identity. That was clearly proved beyond any doubt.

The second question is, "Is the offense one which falls within the treaty?" The term used in the treaty is "perjury" or "subornation of perjury." I am sure that the word "perjury" was used in the treaty in its generic sense. Therefore, it must include kindred offenses. The offense of false swearing in connection with an exit permit would certainly come under the head of kindred offenses and should be included under a construction of the word "perjury."

In determining the second question, whether the offense is one which falls within the treaty, we must determine whether it was a crime in Great Britain. As I previously stated, the British law, as does our law, includes within the charge of perjury the kindred offenses to which I have referred. Therefore it appears that the offense was clearly covered, because it would come under the head of kindred offenses.

The court ruled—and I shall try to quote as accurately as I can from the press report—that there was no doubt of this man's guilt of the crime with which he was charged, but the court did not believe that the crime was one within the meaning of the treaty. This is a very narrow construction of the word "perjury," because of the failure to include within it similar crimes or kindred crimes. It appears clear that if there had been a will to do so, and considering the whole case, a will to help the cause of justice as the United States represented it, the court could as well have held that the charge against Eisler was clearly within the wording and the meaning of the treaty.

Under British law, the statute being of a criminal nature, once Eisler is freed by the Bow Street Court, there is no appeal. Under either the British law or the United States law, if Eisler had been convicted, he could have appealed; but no right of appeal is given to the prosecution in such cases. Nevertheless, the Senator from Michigan hopes this does not end the Eisler case.

Mr. President, I turn now to a highly significant parallel. It is happening here in the United States in connection with cases in which Communists are involved. I believe it strikes at the very fundamentals of justice, as does the Eisler case. I refer to the picketing of courts of justice. I cannot impress too strongly upon the Senate what is occurring in our Country as well as in Great Britain where the courts are fundamental institutions, when a Communist is involved in a court trial and when there is picketing of the court.

This question, and it must be answered:

Many people will ask, "Is it not true that the picketing and political demonstrations intimidated the British court?" Mr. President, the unfortunate thing is that so far as the public is concerned a court cannot prove that it is not intimidated or influenced by the picketing or by political demonstrations. And, on the other hand, the public either here in the United States or in Great Britain, cannot prove that picketing did intimidate or influence the decision of the court. But obviously such picketing strikes at the very foundations and fundamentals of justice, because it leaves in the minds of many persons a belief or feeling that there was intimidation and the court's decision was not a free decision.

In the press of the United States there appeared pictures of what was occurring outside the Bow Street Court, in London. The pictures showed that the picketers carried banners or signs reading "We want Eisler freed."

Mr. President, did such demonstrations influence the decision of the court, or did they not? I say that the courts of the United States and the courts of Great Britain must be like Caesar's wife—above suspicion. If the day ever comes when the courts of Great Britain or the courts of the United States allow themselves to be placed in such a position that the public will be able to draw a conclusion they have been intimidated, or decide cases because of political pressure, that will be a sad day for justice.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FREAR in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. FERGUSON. I am glad to yield for a question.

Mr. EASTLAND. I agree with what the distinguished Senator from Michigan has said about our courts. Does not the Senator realize that if picketing of the courts were permitted, the very next step would be that Communist elements would be picketing jurors, picketing witnesses, picketing the prosecuting attorney who was conducting such a case, trying to intimidate such persons and keep them from performing their duty?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes; it would be only a short step to that situation. And, in effect, jurors are being picketed today. When the jury in the New York case must know that outside the courtroom there is a picket line, and cheering and demonstrations by the picketers, I feel the members of the jury are bound to be affected. Of course, in the case in the British court there was no jury, only the judge.

Nevertheless, I say it will be only a short step before jurors will be picketed in their homes. After all, Mr. President, jurors and judges are human. I say we must remove these pickets and these political demonstrations, so as to prevent any challenge to the jurisdiction of the courts or any attempts at intimidating or influencing the courts. After all, what is the picketing if it is not intended as intimidation of the court, and why should it not be recognized as such?

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. Does the Senator from Michigan mean that at this time any Federal court has the power to protect itself by way of contempt proceedings in such cases?

Mr. FERGUSON. I am firmly of the opinion that the fundamental law of the land gives the courts of justice full power to protect themselves. It is an inherent power they possess. They cannot function without this inherent power.

In the United States the point has been reached that it is almost impossible for a case involving the trial of a Communist or involving communism to be brought up in court unless the judge on the bench is continually heckled—so much so that in the Coplon case, here in the District of Columbia, the judge had to find the defense attorney guilty of contempt of court.

Mr. President, I say the time has come when the bar associations will have to call before them the lawyers who participate in such cases if they do not conduct themselves in the proper way. The attorney is after all an officer of the court, and he must conduct himself accordingly.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. FERGUSON. I am glad to yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. Does not the Senator from Michigan think, for the reason that it is now largely a matter within the discretion of the judge——

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes; it is within the discretion of the judge——

Mr. EASTLAND. Inasmuch as the judge now has the discretion to decide whether he will proceed by way of contempt action, does not the Senator from Michigan believe the Congress should make it mandatory, by way of statute, that the judge proceed to institute contempt proceedings, and that such persons be punished in that way?

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I have come to the conclusion that such statutory action must be taken. The district attorney should be given power to proceed to protect the courts. Of course, the courts already have the authority to act by way of contempt proceedings; but I think we have now reached the point when the United States Congress must by law provide that it is contempt of court to demonstrate outside a court or to picket a court or to attempt to intimidate a court.

If the courts are to continue to hold their high place in the administration of justice—and they must continue to do so—I think the bar associations must say to counsel who participate in a trial involving communism or a Communist, "You have no more rights in this case than you have in any other case; in this case you must conduct yourself in the same way that you should conduct yourself in any other case." Otherwise, Mr. President, unless great care is taken, both in United States courts and in British courts, a most serious situation will be reached. We shall find that we are becoming collaborators with the Communists in their activities, playing into their hands. Obviously we cannot afford to do that.

The present dangerous situation has arisen only because we do not understand that communism really is here in the United States, and in Great Britain as well, I may add.

I say that if Britain today were arguing for the extradition from the United States of a man who had committed a crime similar to that Gerhart Eisler committed, and had been convicted under their laws, our courts would have granted extradition and returned him to England.

Of course, Mr. President, under a treaty it is of prime importance that reciprocity exist. The crime involved in this case is such that a person accused of it would be indictable, if in Great Britain; and if he were in the United States, he would be extraditable from the United States to Great Britain. But under British construction it appears not to be extraditable from Britain. Therefore the treaty means nothing so far as the United States is concerned. That certainly was not anticipated when the treaty was entered into.

Mr. President, did the pickets intimidate or influence the court decision to set Eisler free? Certainly, their demonstrations were aimed at intimidation. As we know to be the case in New York City where Communists are being tried, the only possible purpose of the pickets and the demonstrations and even the actions of the defense lawyers is to intimidate the court, to make it impossible for the court properly to carry on the administration of justice.

I want to comment on another feature of the Eisler case. It is only 2 weeks tomorrow that Eisler was taken off the ship in England. Under the treaty we should have had 60 days in which to prepare the case for extradition and to present evidence. The treaty so provides. But the case was called 3 days ago, and when application for a continuance of 1 week was made in order to obtain one or more witnesses from America, the court gave only the 3-day adjournment, and the case was brought up this morning.

England is still far away from America when it comes to obtaining evidence and presenting it to the court in London. The treaty allows 60 days. The 3-day adjournment was not sufficient. When the request was made in court this morning for an additional continuance of 3 days, until next Monday, the court denied the application and made its ruling forthwith.

Will it be any wonder if people claim there has been a miscarriage of justice in the case? I do not wish to be too severe upon the court. Before I came to the Senate floor this afternoon, I endeavored to obtain all the facts obtainable, that I might call them to the attention of the Senate. I think matters of this kind are very serious.

There was the hue and cry that this was not a criminal action, that it was purely political. An argument was expected that Eisler was a political fugitive, and therefore not subject to extradition under the treaty. The court of Great Britain today has at least ruled it was not political, that it was the case of a common, ordinary criminal who had jumped his bond. But the court interpreted the nature of the crime very narrowly.

Many people will say "good riddance." They will say it is good riddance to get the No. 1 Communist out of America. I cannot agree. Eisler was convicted of a crime, sentence was imposed, and the proper administration of justice requires that he should serve the term imposed by the sentence. If that were not the rule of justice, any man convicted of a crime could put up a bond, or even be placed at liberty under personal bond, and could then flee the country with the United States powerless to follow him.

I say the United States would follow a man if he were not a Communist; so why should we not follow a man who is a Communist? We believe in the motto carved upon the front of the United States Supreme Court Building, across the lawn from the Capitol, "Equal justice under law." We believe that all should be treated alike. The incident cannot be passed off merely by saying it is good riddance. No; Eisler, like anyone else, should be accorded equal treatment under the law.

I think a thorough investigation is necessary in order to ascertain why Gerhart Eisler was allowed to board the Polish ship on which he left this country. I think it will be well to check upon those who represent that steamship line in America, as to how they came here, as to whether they are Communists, as to whether they have violated our immigration laws. If they have violated them, they should be deported.

The same thing may be said of any Communist doing business in America, in violation of our laws. It has been ruled and we know that Communists do not constitute a political party. They are members of a conspiracy. For that reason, laws have been passed to keep them out of this country. Therefore, I urge the Department of Justice to make a full investigation and take all steps permitted by law, to determine what has been done in the past, and to prevent anything of the kind taking place in the future.

But the American people must go further and they must understand the nature of communism in order that they may properly cope with it. If, in the face of all that has happened, we are to treat Communism as merely a political party in America, we must expect to have things happen as they have happened in the Eisler case and as they are happening in other cases here in America. I think it is a matter of importance to the Congress. It is important to the people, and it is vital to our way of life.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF THE UNITED NATIONS

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, despite the fact that we hear some discouraging reports about world conditions, I feel, although the President of the United States has sent to the Congress a report on the accomplishments of the United Nations, it would be well for the Senate to recognize some of the achievements of that organization, and it is for the purpose of calling attention to them that I rise at this time.

On April 5, 1949, when over 400 delegates from 58 nations met at Flushing Meadows to resume the third session of the United Nations General Assembly, the atmosphere was heavy with pessimism and gloom. Twenty-two undecided questions were listed on the agenda. Incidentally, because questions are undecided and because the world is full of gloom, we should not feel that the United Nations is a failure and is not attempting to settle these questions through discussion and the adoption of methods, instead of letting gloom turn to something worse.

Most of the questions had been debated at earlier meetings without reaching any solution, and the prospects of settling most of them at this session seemed dim. The rivary and tension between east and west had never been greater. The Berlin blockade continued unremittingly, with no apparent prospect of being lifted. The Atlantic Pact had been signed the day before in Washington, and while that event gave occasion for great rejoicing on the part of the peoples of western Europe, the men and women who were assembled at Flushing Meadows were apprehensive of the effect which it would have upon the work which needed to be done. The delegates had been made diffident by some critics who had characterized the Assembly as an important debating society. The prospects were not good.

Mr. President, I wonder why it is, after the one-hundred-and-fifty-odd years of experience of the Congress of the United States, and especially the experience of the Senate, that people make fun of debating societies. A body such as the Senate, where there is the right to unlimited debate, and where Members talk regardless, is in reality a debating society. But how are people ever to settle any of the questions which continually arise except through the method of talk? Therefore, without knowing it, those who criticize congresses, parliaments, and international meetings as debating societies sometimes accidentally put faith in those institutions which are the most stable in the whole world today. We can hope and pray that the meetings of the institutions connected with the United Nations may always remain debating societies, and that freedom of speech and freedom of expression shall be unhampered, not only in one community but in the whole world. That was the aim. Representatives of governments meet in the United Nations. We in our country talk much about freedom of speech. What makes our country great is that freedom of speech is indulged in by the branches of government. When we see courts turning political, it means that freedom of speech has been taken away from them, but so long as a Justice of the Supreme Court can say what he wants to say, it means that Government is functioning properly in the United States. Government by talk is inevitable in any democracy. Therefore characterizing any institution as a debating society in no sense hurts its effectiveness, or mars its purposes, or detracts from its accomplishments.

And yet, last week, when Dr. Evatt brought down his gavel and ended the final meeting, hopes for peace were brighter and faith in the United Nations was stronger than it had been for a long time. The record of accomplishment of the General Assembly during the 6 weeks that had seen the political barometer rise from stormy to variable, with a likelihood of going still higher, was one which indicated to all that, in the words of Dr. Evatt, "the United Nations is a going concern and has come to stay." What was that record?

I am not going to paint a shining picture of something that has not been accomplished. We have only the seeds of international organization planted. The growth has to come. No matter how successful one may be momentarily, that is no guaranty of what may follow. But we should recognize the fact when a forward step has been taken, and that is all I am attempting to do.

The Assembly had, in this most fruitful adjourned session, considered and discussed a large number of knotty problems and taken action upon almost all of them. Possibly the outstanding acomplishment of the United Nations, during this meeting of the Assembly, was the role which it played in settling the controversy over Berlin—a controversy which was not even on its agenda and which has not been finished, the controversy is still existent; but which was constantly in the minds of the delegates, and the presence of which affected, directly or indirectly, every debate and every question which was taken up by representatives of east and west. The part of the United Nations in the lifting of the blockade of Berlin is further evidence, if evidence is still needed, of the great importance and value of having a permanent international forum where not only ideas and facts are continuously being exchanged but where the door is always open for discussion and settlements of disputes. The mechanism exists there for the solution of all international problems, and its flexibility permits governments to approach each other, through their representatives, directly or indirectly, in public or in private.

Mr. President, not all the problems of the world will be solved there, not all of them will be half solved, but there is still an agency where an attempt at solution is being made. This was the case in the discussions leading to the lifting of the blockade.

Note the simplicity of the statements which I am going to make, and see how commonplace everything is; but from those commonplaces great things may come.

On February 15, Mr. Jessup approached Mr. Malik, the Soviet representative, in the delegates' lounge at Lake Success, and asked him whether any significance should be attributed to the omission of the problem of Berlin currency in a recent statement by Premier Stalin. Mr. Malik did not reply immediately, but later stated to Mr. Jessup that this omission was not accidental. Conversations continued at the United Nations between Mr. Malik and Mr. Jessup, and eventually the announcement was made that the blockade would be lifted and the foreign ministers would meet. The opportunity afforded by the United Nations for informed discussion and negotiation between the Governments of the United States and the Soviet Union in reaching a solution to the blockade, and in bringing about a meeting of the Foreign Ministers, is a direct and proximate cause of the settlement of this troublesome question.

Mr. President, I should say that I do not in any sense wish to imply that our State Department and other negotiating agencies were not doing all they could, but probably the straw which helped in bringing about decision came from this first conversation.

The matter of the disposal of the former Italian colonies in Africa was probably the most outstanding one on the agenda of the Assembly. The fact that no final decision was reached should not stigmatize the Assembly on this point. As Dr. Evatt stated in his opening address on April 5, the only reason the Italian colonies are an issue on the agenda is solely because those responsible for the peace settlement with Italy could not agree upon any solution. The responsibility still rests with the governments which hold the key to writing a peace treaty between these nations. It is not the responsibility of the United Nations.

The task was given to the Assembly to reach a just decision. After a great deal of debate, in which it was evident that the United States, the United Kingdom, France, the U. S. S. R., and Italy all had divergent views, it was finally decided to postpone any action until next September. By that time it is to be hoped that the international climate will be better adapted to a settlement. Pending the decision by the Assembly, France will continue to administer the Fezzan and the United Kingdom will continue to administer all the remaining Italian colonies in Africa. Although the uncertain future state of these colonies is painful to all interested parties, it is better to proceed slowly if thereby an equitable and lasting solution may be assured.

One of the outstanding events of the last Assembly was the acceptance of Israel as the fifty-ninth member of the United Nations on May 11, thus fulfilling the hopes of thousands of people everywhere. The Arab bloc continued to oppose admission to the very end, but could muster only 12 votes to the 37 favorable votes. The overwhelming majority of the members of the United Nations had already granted recognition to this new state and it was only just and fitting that it should take its place in the United Nations.

Admission of Israel is another step along the road to a peaceful solution of the Palestine problem which has been before the United Nations since the Special Assembly, called at the request of the British, in April 1947, and is a fulfillment of the pledge in the partition plan of November 29, 1947, to give sympathetic consideration to the application for membership of either state envisaged in the plan.

Israel's admission at this time will help the conversations now going on in Lausanne between the Arab States and Israel under the auspices of the United Nations Conciliation Committee to work out a permanent peace settlement.

At this point, I want to pay tribute to a great American, Dr. Ralph Bunche, who as acting mediator for Palestine did so much to help bring about peace and stability to that troubled area. I think we should all be proud of him.

Mr. President, the first time I met this gentleman was at a conference dealing with pacific relations, during which, as a student, he showed a background and understanding of colonial questions the like of which few persons attending that conference had. I have watched his growth and development from that day to this, and I say that our people can be very proud that the school system of America is able to produce such a man.

Another important accomplishment of the Assembly was the approval by a vote of 33 to 6, over the usual vociferous opposition of the Soviet Union and her satellites, of a proposed convention that attempts, for the first time, to set forth basic international principles to safeguard the free flow of information. The draft convention, which was painstakingly drawn in one of the Assembly's committees, contains specific protections for correspondents and news agencies. Its chief purposes are to facilitate the entry, residence, and travel of foreign correspondents, and prevent their arbitrary expulsion, and to facilitate access to news for all correspondents as far as possible on the same basis given to domestic correspondents, and accord the right to transmit dispatches at nondiscriminatory rates. The article dealing with censorship makes any kind of censorship, editing, or delay of dispatches, in peacetime unlawful, except for reasons of national defense and outlines strict conditions under which this limited censorship may be undertaken.

Mr. President, I cannot help but digress for a moment at this point, to call attention to the fact that the only two commercial treaties which the Senate has ratified with former enemy states and the treaty with China, a country which never until the ratification of that particular treaty, or at least since 1844, has conducted in her own right negotiations for a treaty, carry the free information provision. I am happy to say that I had much to do with the preliminary work on them, and with their ratification. I am happy also to realize that the United Nations follows the American ideal in respect to freedom of expression and freedom of news.

The articles which cause the most discussion are the ones which establish an international right of correction, whereby governments may submit their own versions of false and distorted reports to other governments of countries where the original news reports were published, who will release the correction to correspondents and agencies customarily used for the release of news. The corrected agency is not required to publish the correction, but is morally obligated to do so. The fact of its adoption is a milestone in the history of freedom of the press, and if the convention is ratified and becomes effective the work of the Assembly will have accelerated the growth of international understanding and forwarded world-wide dissemination of information.

One of the principal questions under study in the General Assembly was the proposal by Secretary General Lie for the creation of an 800-man United Nations guard force. The chief use of such a force would be to assist and protect missions and commissions of the United Nations operating all over the world and frequently in the disturbed areas. If a detachment of this proposed force had been in Palestine it is possible that Count Bernadotte would not have been assassinated. If such a body had been in existence last March 18, it is also possible that unarmed United Nations observers would not have been attacked and wounded in Indonesia. As stated by Mr. Lie, this guard force would not be a striking force. It would be recruited by the Secretary General and placed at the disposal of the United Nations. It would be small, but would command respect because it would be backed up by the United Nations. The guards would help protect United Nations personnel and property in areas where law and order is not regularly maintained. It cannot be disputed that such a need exists.

This might mark the beginning of what was advocated by many, including myself, even before the United Nations was finally established, that the United Nations must have a peace force—not a police force, Mr. President, but a peace force. That force should be very small, but devoted to peace, and responsible for areas for which the United Nations is responsible. For instance, if the United Nations has a mandate or if it has the administration of a free city, the United Nations should have the authority to protect its rights in such a place. With a small peace force war can be stopped in many places, because no world war has ever started on a large scale. They have always been started by someone who was outside the bounds of decent international behavior or the rules of ordinary international law. All that is required is a small force. That is proved by the situation in our own States. Governors carry on the affairs of their own States sometimes for two or three terms without being obliged to resort to calling out the National Guard. In fact, the National Guard is not being called out any more. It has become a federalized institution practically for all purposes. The fact that the force is apparent and can be used in a small way may result in preventing great catastrophes. Everyone now knows that a simple sanction on oil would have stopped Mussolini, because he could not have acted as he did without oil. The nations of the world by sacrificing the right to sell him a little bit of oil could have prevented what later developed into a tremendous and costly war.

A special 14-nation committee was set up to draw up a detailed report on the mechanics of forming such an organization, which will report to the September session. I hope the United Nations peace force does come into existence.

Another controversial matter which was discussed in the Assembly was the question of the trials of Joseph Cardinal Mindszenty and Bulgarian Protestant clergymen—the chief argument centered about whether the subject should be on the agenda at all. The Soviet bloc was uniformly of the opinion that the Assembly had no jurisdiction to discuss the trials. The original sponsors of the investigating move were Bolivia and Australia, who suggested that the Assembly look into the question of observance of human rights in Bulgaria and Hungary. The United States and Britain, on the other hand, preferred to base their complaint on violation by Bulgaria and Hungary of peace-treaty provisions. The Assembly voted, with a large number of abstentions, to conduct a full debate on the Mindszenty case in Hungary and the trials of the Protestant churchmen in Bulgaria. The debate was held, but the Assembly voted to postpone any action in either of the cases until next fall. The resolution did express, however, the Assembly's deep concern at the grave accusations made against the Governments of Bulgaria and Hungary regarding the suppression of human rights and fundamental freedoms of those countries. It also left the issue up to the Americans and the British as signers of the peace treaties with the two accused states, and included the hope that measures will be diligently applied in accordance with the treaties in order to restore respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms of those countries. The resolution reminded both Governments of their treaty obligations and of their duty to cooperate in settling the issue.

Spain also was the subject of considerable discussion during the last session of the Assembly. It will be remembered that in December 1946, the General Assembly passed a resolution censuring the Franco regime, asking United Nations member states to recall their ambassadors and ministers from Madrid, and prohibiting Franco Spain from membership in United Nations organizations. During the closing days of the latest Assembly meeting, a resolution was introduced by the Latin-American bloc which would have, in substance, canceled part of the 1946 resolution and repeated the argument that it was a matter of domestic concern, but the conscience of the world, as expressed through the delegates to the General Assembly, took the position that the abrogation of human rights anywhere was the concern of all. By an overwhelming vote of 47 with only 1 against and 10 abstentions, the Assembly asked the Governments of India, Pakistan, and the Union of South Africa to enter into discussion, too, on the situation, "taking into consideration the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration of Human Rights."

This is one of the first times that the Declaration of Human Rights adopted by the Assembly last December has been cited in an Assembly resolution. This document, developed by the Commission on Human Rights, of which Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt is chairman, was a great step forward in the achievement of human rights and will continue to serve as a common standard for the conduct of states.

One of the least noticed but at the same time one of the most important and far-reaching steps taken by the General Assembly was the adoption on April 28 of a series of resolutions looking toward the improvement of the conciliation procedures of the United Nations.

By these resolutions, adopted by the overwhelming majority of the members of the United Nations, the general act of September 26, 1948, was restored to its original effectiveness by gearing it into the United Nations.

The second resolution recommended that the Security Council examine the desirability and utility of adopting a practice whereby, after a dispute has been brought to its attention and before full debate, the President of the Council would appoint a representative of the Council to serve as rapporteur or conciliator to attempt to work out a settlement of the dispute.

In the third resolution the Interim Committee was instructed to give further consideration to the proposed amendments to the rules of procedure of the General Assembly.

Another example of a problem which receives little publicity in the Assembly, but which adds to the difficulties there, is that of languages. The present working languages are English, French, and Spanish. Proposals during the last session to add Russian and Chinese as working languages were deferred for future consideration. Adoption of this proposal would add to the already vast expense of interpreting and translating the languages that are at present spoken and written at the United Nations. Chinese and Russian are already official languages of the organization.

The foregoing have only been a few of the more outstanding questions discussed in the General Assembly during the past 6 weeks. Others may be mentioned briefly.

Settlement of the Indonesian question seemed to have reached an impasse by the time the General Assembly opened on April 5. However, the persistent efforts of the United Nations Commission on Indonesia brought fruit and the General Assembly, after noting the successful outcome of preliminary negotiations between the Dutch and the Indonesians at Batavia on May 7, voted to postpone discussion of the matter until September.

I am sure that my colleague the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM] who assisted in the early efforts at peaceful settlement, is delighted that the United Nations, reinforced by world public opinion, now seems on the way to bringing peace to that troubled area.

The last resolution approved the creation of a panel for inquiry and conciliation. In the resolution the Assembly noted from its experience the desirability of having qualified persons readily available to assist in peaceful settlement of disputes and situations and invited member states to designate one to five persons to serve as members of commissions of inquiry or conciliation. The Secretary General was directed to take charge of the administrative arrangements connected with the composition and use of the panel.

One cannot overemphasize the importance of these resolutions. The successful functioning of the procedures of both the Security Council and the General Assembly for peaceful settlement of disputes will go a long way toward making stronger action under chapter 7 unnecessary.

After this brief review of the major accomplishments of the recent Assembly session, you will have seen that the delegates who departed last week for their homes over the vast surface of the earth could well afford to be more optimistic than they were 6 weeks before. They had worked hard, and well. These problems were not simple and those attempting to solve them were only human. The attempts were generally made in a spirit of constructive effort, and relatively little was done by representatives in the way of express obstruction.

From time to time representatives did use the international forum of the Assembly as a sounding board for propaganda purposes. We will use it upon such occasions as a sounding board for the challenge of such propaganda. Far from being an impotent debating society, the General Assembly is a melting pot of ideas, a meeting place for the meeting of minds, a superembassy where the representatives of 59 countries are gathered together under one roof—and a supreme world parliament. To the extent that they do debate and argue, sometimes bitterly, always with vigor, they are fulfilling one of the purposes of the organization. Representatives to the General Assembly are supposed to debate. And the more they do so the more and the better they will get to know and understand each other and each other's problems, and the closer we will be toward the permanent peace which we all seek.

HOME RULE FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1527) to provide for home rule and reorganization in the District of Columbia.

Mrs. SMITH of Maine. Mr. President, I have the privilege of serving on the District of Columbia Committee and the Home Rule Subcommittee with the distinguished and able Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER]. I take this opportunity to commend him for his interest and his untiring efforts and efficient handling of the home-rule bill.

As a member of the committee I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks pertinent inquiries and answers on the question of home rule for the District of Columbia.

There being no objection, the questions and answers were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

1. Is home rule for the District of Columbia desirable?

Home rule is desirable for three reasons:

(a) It would relieve Congress as much as possible of the burden of District affairs, without surrendering its constitutional powers;

(b) It would create a democratic and representative form of local government for the District chosen by qualified electors;

(c) It would provide an efficient and economical government for the District of Columbia.

2. Why is the District of Columbia without a vote?

From 1800 to 1874 the people of the District exercised the right of suffrage and self-government in one form or another. On June 20, 1874, primarily because of the dissatisfaction with Boss Shepherd and his autonomous leadership, Congress provided that the District of Columbia should be governed by three Commissioners, appointed by the President. This temporary form of government was made permanent in 1878.

3. Is there a constitutional provision which prohibits home rule in the District of Columbia?

Emphatically not.

(a) Home rule was exercised in the District for 75 years.

(b) By analogy home rule is exercised in the Territories.

4. Do the people of the District want home rule?

From all expressions of opinion available, the people of the District genuinely desire home rule. By polls conducted by the Washington Board of Trade and the Washington Post, the latter as late as 1946, the overwhelming majority of the people voted in favor of such a proposal. Moreover, for what it is worth, a Gallup poll of the United States favored home rule for the District of Columbia.

5. Has either of the two major political parties taken a position on the question of home rule for the District?

Yes. Both the Democratic and the Republican Parties have taken the position that they favor home rule for the District.

6. Is the home rule bill (S. 1527) sponsored by members of both the Democratic and the Republican Parties?

Yes. This bill is sponsored jointly by five Democrats and four Republicans, as follows: Democrats, Senators KEFAUVER, HUNT, MCGRATH, MILLER, and NEELY; Republicans, Senators HENDRICKSON, MCCARTHY, SCHOEPPEL, and Mrs. SMITH of Maine.

7. Is congressional control of the District of Columbia retained?

Yes. Congressional control is retained, especially in two provisions:

(a) On matters described as legislative proposals, which before becoming effective, must be submitted to Congress, subject to a concurrent resolution veto, and

(b) Express provisions enabling Congress to change or modify any provisions in the charter or any law enacted by the Council. Moreover, there are numerous other provisions which provide for Federal supervision, such as post audit by the General Accounting Office, supervision of elections, etc.

8. Does this bill provide for national representation?

No. This bill deals entirely with local home rule. No representation in Congress, either in the form of a Delegate or in the form of elected Senators or Representatives, is provided for in this bill.

9. What is the status of the District of Columbia under this pending bill?

The District is given powers exceeding that of municipal government, but less than that of Territorial legislatures.

10. What form of local government is selected for the District?

A District Council, consisting of 11 members, two of whom are appointed by the President, and 9 elected by the people, form the policy-making body of the government. The District manager is selected by the Council to carry out the executive functions.

11. How are the two members selected by the President?

Two members of the Council are appointed by the President without restrictions, but must be confirmed by the Senate. Their term is a 4-year staggered term.

12. What are the qualifications of the nine elected members of the Council?

(a) Must be qualified electors.

(b) Must reside and be domiciled in the District.

(c) Must hold no other elective public office.

(d) Must hold no appointive office for which compensation is provided out of District funds.

13. What is the compensation of the Council members?

The Council members shall receive compensation at $5,000 a year, except the chairman, who will receive $7,500, plus a $3,000 annual expense account.

14. What powers does the District Council exercise?

(a) All powers presently exercised by the Board of Commissioners.

(b) All powers exercised by the Zoning Commission.

(c) Authority to enact legislative proposals on any subject within the scope of the powers of the Congress presently acting as the legislature for the District.

15. How is the chairman of the Council selected?

The chairman is selected by the full eleven-man Council and may be either an elective or an appointive member. Such chairman holds office for 2 years.

16. What are the duties of the chairman?

(a) He is the presiding officer of the Council.

(b) He is the official spokesman for the District.

(c) He is the head of the District for ceremonial purposes.

17. What are legislative proposals and what are District ordinances?

In general, District ordinances are laws passed which could presently be enacted by the Board of Commissioners. All other matter, which are not subjects of legislation by the Board of Commissioners, but are subjects of legislation falling within the scope of the power of Congress acting in its capacity as legislature for the District, are considered legislative proposals.

18. What is the procedure for legislative proposals being enacted into law?

(a) Must be deposited with Congress.

(b) If Congress does not pass a concurrent resolution disapproving the proposal within 45 calendar days, and

(c) If the President does not veto nor disapprove within 10 additional days, the legislative proposals become law.

(d) Special requirements are made for legislative proposals relating to bonds.

Such bonds may be issued in amounts not to exceed 5 percent of the assessed value of the taxable real property in the District.

24. What is the procedure for authorizing a bond issue to finance capital projects?

(a) A legislative proposal must pass the District Council and be submitted to the Congress in due course.

(b) If no disapproval is registered by Congress or the President in the prescribed period of time, the legislative proposal must be submitted to the qualified electors of the District in a referendum.

25. Are provisions included which protect the Government against unsound public finances?

Yes; the bill provides that maximum maturity of bonds shall not exceed 30 years or the period of usefulness of the capital project for which the bonds are issued, whichever is the shorter period. All bonds must be paid off in consecutive annual installments and must be sold at public sale upon sealed proposals. Provision is made for giving notice by publication of the proposed issuance of bonds.

26. Is short-term financing provided for in the bill, and what is its limitations, if any?

(a) This bill authorizes the issuance of short-term notes to meet emergency appropriations.

(b) All appropriations lapse at the end of each budget year to the extent that they have not been disbursed or lawfully encumbered.

(c) No contract involving expenditure of appropriations of more than 1 year shall be made for a period of more than 5 years and then only if approved by or made pursuant to an ordinance.

30. What procedure, if any, is established for the payment of Federal agencies performing District functions, and vice versa?

A system has been included whereby estimation and payment are made in advance for such services. Payment of the balance owing to the Federal Government or to the District, as the case may be, for each year will be made on or before July 31 of the fiscal year, reduced or increased by any amount by which estimates of prior years have been in error.

31. Is reorganization of the executive departments necessary and desirable.

Yes. The present form of government developed over a period of years into a maze of some 126 bureaus, departments, commissions, and boards, either wholly or partially performing District functions. Only a handful of such boards are under the full control of the Commissioners, while the rest are subject to varying degrees of control, ranging from administrative control by the Board of Commissioners, to no control. The correction of this governmental hodge-podge will establish a clear line of authority enabling a more economical and efficient administration.

32. What form of reorganization does this bill propose?

Basically, the bill establishes 12 executive departments into which most of the present agencies of the government are consolidated. This plan was the result of intensive research by the Auchincloss home rule committee of last year, and has been adopted in substance.

53. Should this home-rule legislation become law, what procedure is set for the effectuation of the objectives?

(a) Five hundred thousand dollars is authorized to be appropriated to the District of Columbia for the establishment of the Charter Referendum Board and the Board of Elections. This amount is to be reimbursed to the United States by the District during the following fiscal year.

(b) The results of a popular referendum to be held November 15, 1949, must show that a majority of the voters favor enactment of this legislation.

54. What are the effective dates of this act?

With certain exceptions, this act shall take effect on the day following the date on which it is accepted in the charter referendum, but in no case later than November 22, 1949.

55. Why does the Federal Government contribute to revenues in the District government?

The principal reason for the Federal Government contribution to the District is because of its large holdings which are excluded from taxes, and from the various services which are rendered to the Federal Government for which no charge is made.

56. What is the extent of the Federal contribution?

Under the present law the Federal contribution is limited to a lump sum of $12,000,000, of which $1,000,000 is appropriated for the water fund.

57. What is the formula for Federal contribution in this bill?

For every dollar that is derived from local revenues, the Federal Government will contribute an additional 20 cents.

58. What will be the revenue derived from this proposed formula?

General fund for 1949–50	$86,921,000
Highway	9,395,000
Water	5,195,011
	101,511,011
Special account revenue	130,000
	101,641,011

Federal contribution by application of proposed formula, $20,328,202.20.

59. If the District revenue exceeds its expense, what happens to the excess revenues?

Provision is made for surplus revenues to be set aside to be used exclusively for the construction, repair, and improvement of public schools in the District, which is greatly needed.

60. Is the Federal contribution justified?

Yes; the Federal Government owns more than 51 percent of the land area in the District, from which no tax revenue is obtainable. From the other 49 percent of the land, the District obtained $31,500,000 in revenue in 1948.

Roughly, on the basis of land area, the Federal Government in contributing $20,000,000 is not contributing more than its share.

61. What are some of the things the bill does not do?

The bill does not provide for national representation; does not affect the judicial system of the District, and in no way changes the substantive law of the District.

FEDERAL TAX, SPENDING, AND DEBT POLICIES—REFERENDUM AMONG READERS OF OMAHA (NEBR.) WORLD-HERALD

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, during the past week thousands of Nebraskans have delivered an overwhelming ultimatum to Nebraska Members of Congress for not only a reduction in current Federal expenditures but also against new spending programs which currently are being urged upon them.

This voluntary referendum has come to Members of the Nebraska congressional delegation in the form of ballots published May 11 in the Omaha World-Herald, which circulates throughout the State of Nebraska and surrounding areas.

The World-Herald ballots invited readers to express themselves for or against a 10-percent cut in all Federal expenditures, subject to adjustment. It also invited its readers to express themselves for or against seven pending governmental programs which would commit the Federal Government to additional expenditures, and on the subject of income and pay-roll taxes.

These ballots were inspired by the warnings, which several of us have been sounding on the Senate floor, that we face the inescapable choice of increasing Federal taxes, resorting again to deficit spending, or reducing Federal expenditures. Particularly was this referendum a response to the stirring speech delivered on this floor on May 6 by the distinguished senior Senator from Virginia, the Honorable HARRY BYRD, on the fiscal situation which presently confronts this country.

In a full page devoted to the Federal fiscal problem, and carrying the ballots to which I refer, the World-Herald stated:

> The only way you can influence the amount of Federal taxes you and your children and your grandchildren are going to pay is by telling our Congressman and Senators what you think about tax-consuming proposals. You will pay these proposed taxes directly or indirectly, as the Federal Government hasn't a cent except what it takes from all of us in taxes.
> Printed on this page are two ballots. You can vote just how you feel about the administration plans after weighing the cost.
> The ballot to the left is for your Congressman. That on the right is for your two Senators.
> Vote your opinions and mail one ballot to your Congressman and one to either of your Senators.
> Do you believe that you can afford—or that you want—the things listed in the ballots on this page?
> Please clip out the ballots, mark them, and mail them today.

Mr. President, as a result of this invitation, my own office has been literally swamped by more than 6,000 marked ballots from persons in every walk of life.

I am advised that the office of my colleague [Mr. BUTLER] has likewise been deluged with an almost equal number of ballots. Heavy response also flowed into the offices of the four Nebraska Members of the House of Representatives. It is my conservative estimate that between ten and twelve thousand readers have expressed themselves to the two Nebraska senatorial offices and an equal number to the offices of the four Nebraska House Members.

Every person participating in the referendum did so on his own initiative. Those people sprang at the opportunity to express their deep concern with Federal spending, Federal tax policies, and Federal debt policies. Each clipped his own ballot, used his own stamp to mail the ballot, and thousands took the further trouble to mail a personal letter expanding their own opinions.

The result of the referendum is so overwhelming in favor of cutting Federal expenditures, and so lopsidedly against increased taxes and against new spending for additional Government programs, that I directed workers in my own office to retabulate the result, for the sake of accuracy.

At this point, I call attention to the exact wording of the ballot and the results of the vote on the eight submitted questions. I am advised that the vote on the ballots I received is in the same ratio as that shown on the ballots received by my colleague, the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] and our Nebraska delegation in the House of Representatives.

The ballot and results of the votes cast by the 6,003 persons who mailed their opinions to me are as follows:

How do you feel about—	For	Against
1. A straight 10-percent cut in all Federal expenditures that can be cut?	5,869	134
2. Secretary of Agriculture Brannan's farm plan, the cost of which Secretary Brannan himself is unable to estimate? (Senator BYRD did not estimate the cost but others have suggested figures up to $10,000,000,000 a year for this subsidy)	102	5,834
3. The so-called national health plan? (This calls for increased pay-roll taxes. Senator BYRD, referring to it as "socialized medicine," estimated a $10,000,000,000 annual cost)	99	5,828
4. The Federal housing program recently enacted by the Senate? (The cost of the low-rent feature alone amounts to a possible $20,000,000,000 over 40 years, according to Senator BYRD, even if it is not later expanded)	214	5,704
5. Federal aid to education, costing $300,000,000 the first year? (Senator BYRD does not believe the cost would ever be that low again)	514	5,320
6. The ECA program costing $5,500,000,000 for the coming year? (This is chiefly aid to Europe under the so-called Marshall plan)	833	4,927
7. Arms for the North Atlantic Pact, to cost something over $1,000,000,000 in the coming year? (Mr. BYRD thinks that estimate is too low)	980	4,886
8. Increased income and pay-roll taxes that Senator BYRD says will be necessary to carry out the President's many recommendations for more spending?	96	5,876

Replies to question 6 concerning the ECA program were qualified in many cases. Qualifications were tabulated as "for," although a stricter interpretation would reduce the figure considerably. Most qualifications were in the nature of recommendations for reducing the ECA appropriation in amounts ranging from 25 to 50 percent.

Replies to the question about arms for the North Atlantic Pact include a surprising number who favored the pact but opposed the provision of arms assistance to other nations.

In connection with the No. 2 question, in regard to the Brannan farm plan, I should like to call attention to the fact that Nebraska is an agricultural State, and most of our citizens live on farms or in small communities which directly gain their living from the farm.

Mr. President, I urge the closest and most serious attention by the Senate to the overwhelming nature of these votes. In many cases the opinion of more than 6,000 typical Americans is all but unanimous. These ballots came from farmers, from laborers, from housewives, from small-business men, and from professional people. They came from people who pay Federal taxes in nearly every income bracket and from many people who pay nothing at all.

It is not my intention to represent this referendum as a mandate from the American people or as a mandate from the State of Nebraska. But I believe it could be so construed with greater force and with more logic than the claim that a certain recent election with its multitude of overlapping and confused issues was a mandate for any particular legislative action or group of legislative proposals.

It is, I believe, reasonable to assume that the voice of these 6,000 men and women is as fair an expression of Nation-wide thinking as that of any 6,000 persons who might be polled anywhere in the United States.

These ballots prove conclusively that the American people are sorely troubled by the instability of the Federal financial structure. They are saying for themselves what I have been saying for them on the Senate floor, and what the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and certain other Senate Members have likewise stated with great force, that we cannot have national security, domestic prosperity, or a peaceful world unless we now take resolute steps to put our national financial house in order.

Lip service will not provide the remedy. We cannot be for reduced total Federal expenditures on the one hand and for new plans which would increase the total Federal spending obligation. We cannot achieve a balanced Federal budget by cutting everyone else's project but our own.

The votes cast in this referendum, I say point the correct way, the only way, in which we can achieve governmental economy and the balanced budget which our national welfare demands.

Let these splendid Nebraska people tell in their own words why they voted as they did. I read a few excerpts from the letters which came by the bagful during this referendum. These are typical commentaries:

Mr. O. Carter, of Silver Creek, Nebr., asks, "If I, as a businessman, was already in debt for more than I was worth, and still tried to get out of debt by going deeper and deeper in debt, you would say that I was a durned fool—and I would be."

Mrs. John Milton Peters, of Bellevue, Nebr., says, "If these bills are passed, we either increase the amount of taxes we are paying now, or our country will be operating on the biggest deficit it has ever known."

Dr. Maurice D. Frazer, of Lincoln, Nebr., says, "I think it is high time that we retrench Government spending to the bone. It would seem, as the Honorable James Byrnes expressed it, that the nearest thing to immortality on this earth is a Federal bureau."

Mr. W. W. Reed, of Rosalie, Nebr., says, "I am opposed to any additional spending at this time and think we should sit tight and take a cooling-off period to determine just where we are at."

Mr. E. F. Lewis, a small-business man of Omaha, Nebr., says, "We are sick to death of hearing about billions more being appropriated for all sorts of fool things, while we are struggling to equip a small business so that it will be profitable and provide employment for at least 10 people. Tell us how we can improve working conditions, enlarge our plant, raise our employees' wages, and lower the price of our product, with pay-roll taxes increasing and taxes piled on us."

Mr. E. L. Balz, of Fremont, Nebr. "Let us get down to common sense and cut the suit according to the cloth. Stop all new wild and woolly ideas like Secretary of Agriculture Brannan's plan and others. Look into the demands of foreign countries."

Mrs. Henrietta B. Edgerly, of Omaha, Nebr., says, "All this fuss in Washington about taking care of everybody with more taxes and more subsidies seems pretty silly. Doesn't President Truman know that $200,000,000,000 is a deficit and not a surplus."

As one Member of the Senate, I am grateful that my people have spoken in so candid and unmistakable language. They have immeasurably fortified me, in the position to which I have worked with all possible consistency. They have renewed my own determination to see this question through to a satisfactory conclusion, and I submit to my fellow Members of the Senate that we have here, in the referendum result which I have just presented, a most valuable example of American thinking. It challenges our ability and demands our utmost attention.

LIQUIDATION OF TRUSTS UNDER TRANSFER AGREEMENTS—MOTION TO RECONSIDER

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, on last Monday, May 23, on the call of the calendar of bills to which there was no objection Senate bill 930, Order No. 392, was considered and without objection passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the bill by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 930) to provide for the liquidation of the trusts under the transfer agreements with State rural rehabilitation corporations, and for other purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Unfortunately, I was not present at the time, and I do not know that I would have identified the purpose of the bill from the description of it. I had some knowledge of the proposal prior to last Monday, but I did not know that this legislation was pending. I did not identify the purposes of the legislation with the bill on the calendar. I therefore call attention to the fact that it was passed without objection. Had I known of the bill and its objectives, I certainly would have objected to its passage. As I say, I did not identify the bill, and therefore did not offer an objection.

I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 930 was passed.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, in view of the fact that probably some of the Members vitally interested in certain phases of the matter might not have the opportunity to present argument, if they desire to do so, in opposition to the request of the distinguished Senator from Colorado, I should like to ask if those who were interested in sponsoring the bill have been notified that the motion to reconsider would be made?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No, they have not. As I have already stated, the bill passed by unanimous consent, and certainly I would have opposed it had I known it was going to pass. The only recourse I have now is to ask for a reconsideration. That is the only way I can voice my opposition to it, and that is what I am doing.

I realize I must have unanimous consent to make such a motion at the present time, because a period of 3 days has elapsed since the passage of the bill, and the only way I can obtain reconsideration is by requesting unanimous consent for its reconsideration. I hope the Senator will not object to it. I realize the strength of the argument he makes, that perhaps if all the Senators were present some one of them might object to reconsideration of the bill. But I think as a matter of fair play, a bill on the consent calendar ought to be passed only with the unanimous consent of the Senate. That is the spirit in which we pass bills by unanimous consent. For that reason, even though I may be a little late, I still make the request and do what I can at this time to have the bill reconsidered. It may be that I do not fully understand the bill, its purposes, or the effectiveness of its language. It may be that if I had a further explanation from its sponsors I might be convinced the bill should pass, or that perhaps amendments could be perfected which would make it satisfactory to me. Of course, if there is objection to my request there is nothing I can do about it.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I do not want to be so presumptuous as to indicate positively that I shall object, but I think, in fairness to Senators who may not know of the position which the Senator from Colorado is now taking, we should have some indication as to the reason for the position he takes at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. First, I want to say to the Senator that the bill was passed in my absence. If it was passed in the absence of some other Senators, they are at least receiving the same consideration I received and which I should expect to receive when I am not present to object.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I may say to the distinguished Senator from Colorado that I shall not object, but I want to know what the basic reasons are which the Senator has in mind.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. My reason is that, as I understand the bill, it proposes to turn over to the States $52,000,000 which really belongs to the United States Government. It may be that the States should have the money. It was turned over to them once, through a technicality, for rehabilitation purposes during the depression, but through some technicality, the money did not go to the States. My purpose is to have a full explanation and a full consideration of the bill. That is what I am seeking. The only way I can do it is to proceed in the way in which I am proceeding.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I withdraw any objection I have.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I renew my request for unanimous consent to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 930 was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado? The Chair hears none, and the motion to reconsider will be entered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I now move that the House of Representatives be requested to return the bill to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

The motion was agreed to.

HOME RULE FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1527) to provide for home rule and reorganization in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I wish to address myself briefly to the important subject—and I think it is a highly important subject—presented by the pending District home rule bill, the Kefauver bill, which is entitled to a great deal more consideration than it is apparently receiving, when one looks over the Senate Chamber at this time.

Mr. President, this bill involves a highly important question of essential civil rights applicable not only to the approximately 900,000 citizens of the District of Columbia, but applicable to many other persons who will come here in the future and remain for a season and make themselves, to all intents and purposes, a part of this community. Here they find themselves denied the advantages given to citizens in every other American city and community in our Nation, namely, the right of home rule, the right of determining by their own votes who shall serve as the members of their municipal executive body, and as the members of their executive school body, and who, in short, shall be, to them, representatives of a government which is their government, and who will be answerable and responsive to them and their wishes, just as those who reside in other communities of the Nation expect their locally elected municipal and school officials to be responsive and answerable to the will of the citizens of those various communities, embracing every community in the Nation, except the District of Columbia, in which there reside approximately 900,000 American citizens.

In the first place, I wish to invite attention to the fact that the question of civil rights—and that is what it is—does not come up because it was given no attention by the founding fathers, but it comes up, instead, because of the fact that, for purposes which are perfectly clear, if we examine the RECORD of 1873 and 1874, but which are not at all good purposes at this time, the Congress, in the year 1874, saw fit to take away from the then residents of the District of Columbia the local franchise and suffrage which they had enjoyed without interruption since 1802, when the District began to operate under what was then called a charter, which was passed by the Congress 2 years after the District was created and began to function.

Mr. President, there is no doubt about the fact that the Founding Fathers intended the people of the Federal District to have local self-government and all of the rights and duties which pertain to local self-government, because Madison, who knew more about the Constitution than did any other one individual, said so in so many words in the forty-third paper of that collection of papers called The Federalist, which was published during the time that the Constitution was being considered, in 1787, by the Thirteen Original States.

I shall not quote at length from this paper, but I shall quote enough to make perfectly clear what Mr. Madison, speaking with the authority that he alone could have because of his intimate knowledge of what had transpired at the Philadelphia Convention of 1787, said on this subject. He had been talking about the establishment of the District as a whole and the fact that there should be no trouble in connection with it, that the State ceding it would have agreed to the cession before the District could be established, that the Federal Government could not merely take it, that the local inhabitants would have participated in the election of the legislature and the governor at the time, and that no doubt the State would provide in the compact of cession for the retention of the rights of citizenship by those residents of the area which should become a Federal District, the District of Columbia. Speaking of the democratic nature of the procedure and the reasons why the setting up of the District would be thoroughly satisfactory to the inhabitants he gave these reasons, namely:

As they will have had—

He is speaking of the residents of the District—

As they will have had their voice in the election of the government which is to exercise authority over them—

He is speaking there of the State government which makes the cession—and continuing—as a municipal legislature for local purposes, derived from their own suffrages, will, of course, be allowed them.

I shall not continue to quote from the article. I reread that last short quotation:

as a municipal legislature for local purposes, derived from their own suffrages, will, of course, be allowed them.

Mr. President, without commenting in detail at all I think it is abundantly clear that Mr. Madison stated and that the founding fathers intended beyond any peradventure of doubt that a local legislative body elected by the votes of the people who should be from time to time residents and citizens of this District should continue to exist, and should continue to have the power of passing local government.

In 1874 another system was set up. I think that the mere fact that it was set up, and that it has functioned with varied success from that time, is by no matter of means a sufficient reason for permitting us to continue to neglect what was a primary conception of the founding fathers of our Nation in connection with the rights, privileges and duties of the residents of the Federal district at the time they drafted and submitted the Federal Constitution.

Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that we who come from other areas consider it as entirely essential to having any degree of democracy, any degree of republican government whatever, to have for ourselves the privileges and the rights, as well as the duties and responsibilities, of local citizenship, under which we claim as a first right the matter of choosing for ourselves and from among our own number those who shall make our local laws and regulations, those who shall administer our local public business, and those who shall have to do with the administration of the school system for our local area.

In the case of the District of Columbia there is a peculiar situation, in that the District partakes of the nature of a State, partakes of the nature of a county, partakes of the nature of a school district, and also partakes of the nature of a municipality. As I see it, we cannot continue longer to deprive citizens of this area of the right to exercise over themselves, through citizens of their own selection, the ordinary powers of local government, at all levels, from State government down to municipal government, which are taken for granted in every other place in this Nation. I think we cannot safely do it for a great many reasons, one of which is that I believe that the attitude of the citizens here themselves is getting to be lackadaisical, is getting to be such that they pay little attention to too many of the important aspects of their local government, too little attention to the economy of local government.

Mr. President, I say this without any disagreeable implications, but I have been surprised and somewhat shocked to find that excellent citizens and fine people in this area have apparently no concern whatever in this question, but instead are much more concerned with whether the gasoline tax is to be 3 cents, 4 cents, or 5 cents, or whether one privilege or another which they cherish will be allowed to them. There is too little importance attached in the area itself to this vital question, and the reason is that since 1874 the people here have become more and more accustomed to a government in which they have no say and no responsibility, and are therefore more acquiescent to the continuation of a condition which we know is not a good or sound or wholesome or democratic condition.

Mr. President, there are several aspects of this question which concern me, first, from the standpoint of the citizens of the District themselves. I have touched on this point, but I want to expand on it briefly. It seems to me that the present situation, with its complete absence of responsibility in the individual citizen, necessarily breeds lack of interest, lack of pride, lack of information, as to the details of the local government and too often lack of confidence in and respect for the two local governments which are closest to the residents of the District of Columbia, and have most to do with their daily lives, and with the rendition of those services which mean most to them and to their families.

The services of the city and of the school district include, among other things, police and fire protection, sanitation, public health, public safety, public welfare, and public education. Such a system, to my way of thinking, is very bad for the citizens themselves, and I think I need do no more than state what is known to the Presiding Officer and to each of the small number of Senators present, that too few of the citizens here have any interest whatever in their government, that the condition is drifting from bad to worse, and cannot be expected to do other than to continue to drift to still worse conditions under the present system.

Mr. President, it is common knowledge, it is common talk, that there are committed in the District an exceedingly large number of crimes of certain kinds, a much greater number than occurs, for instance, in the nearby cities of Baltimore and Richmond, where much the same situation exists with reference to the composition of the population of those two fine cities. The answer of course is the lack of interest on the part of the citizens themselves in their local government, knowledge of the fact that that government is too often not responsive to them because it is not answerable to them, in the sense that the members of other local governments have to come periodically, from year to year, or at frequent periods, before their own citizens for approval or disapproval of the performance of their official trust.

Mr. President, from the standpoint of the attitude of the public employees and the public services, this system is a bad system. These employees and services cannot be and they are not responsible to the will and the legitimate requests of citizens of the District as they would be under a system of representative government which would allow the citizens the right and put upon them the responsibility of selecting the key officials who would have direct control and supervision over the District employees and services.

Mr. President, I wonder if there is a single citizen of this District who thinks that he receives the same kind of consideration, and has the same sort of attitude manifested toward him by the public employees in this District, as is manifested toward a Member of the Congress of the United States. Unhappily, it is a fact, as stated to me not once, but many, many times by citizens of the District in both high and low places, that they realize that the essential services of the District and the personnel of the District are not always, but are in many instances, unresponsive to the needs of the average citizen. The reason is that the District employees know that those who are immediately over them are not selected by the average citizen, that the average citizen has nothing at all to do with whether or not they shall continue in the position of membership on the Board of Commissioners or membership on the school board.

Many citizens in the District have told me that they have not permitted their children to attend the District schools, and that the reason for that is the lack of personal interest in the District schools, the lack of personal responsiveness in the District schools, the lack of that degree of interest and responsiveness which would occur and does occur in those American communities where the teachers are selected by officials who in turn are answerable to and selected periodically by the citizens themselves.

Mr. President, from the standpoint of giving to local needs of the District that immediate and careful attention which they deserve and require, this system is a bad one, because every Senator and every Representative has to give primary attention to the needs of the people of his own State or district, who elect him, as well as to the pressing needs of the Nation as a whole, and the District and its needs are bound to come last, and too often have come at long last. It is only human nature that Senators and Representatives will give first importance to those matters that touch primarily the people whom they represent and who select them to come here.

It is a sad commentary, Mr. President, that the burdens imposed upon every Senator and every Representative are so great, that they make so many demands upon the strength and the energy of every Member of the Congress, that he cannot possibly do everything he would like to do. Senators know perfectly well that every member of the District Committees, at least since I have been here, both in the Senate and in the House, likes to give just as good service to the District Committee as he does to any other cause, but he cannot possibly do it because of the pressure of business, because of the fact that he cannot attend to it all, and the fact that necessarily he has to give primary attention to those matters which come up from his own people or his own State, or those pressing national matters which are now taking and will continue to take a large part of the time of all Members of the Congress.

There is another point I want to make, and that is that from the standpoint of the Senators' own ability to stand up under the problems with which they have to deal, and to do the job they would like to do, they find it impossible—and I am sure this also prevails in the other House—to stand up under the tremendous amount of detail of petty things which under the present system fall upon and require the services of the members of the District Committee.

Mr. President, you know as well as I the large number of inconsequential things, matters which are not substantial, which have come before this body in the time during which we have served here together. You know that they have run through such a list of various matters that we could for 5 minutes recite the kind of things which have been happening and which have taken precious time of those Members who have been assigned to the committees, and also much time on the floor. I am talking about such things as the matter of determining, as we did last session, whether or not mixed boxing bouts should be permitted in the District of Columbia; whether or not it was to the public interest and to be required in the public necessity to remove from one of the streets near the White House a couple of ancient stone columns which had been there for a great many years; the question of what kind of treatment we should accord to the starlings which come here to roost upon the Federal buildings during the cold weather. A good bit of time was given to that very vital question.

Also much time was given to the equally vital question of whether or not those who sell bottled soft drinks within the District of Columbia should be required to furnish straws to their customers; the question of whether or not the members of the barber board should have certain powers, and whether or not barbers serving at their trade within the District of Columbia should be permitted to work a certain number of hours and no longer.

We also gave much time to changing the names of streets, and the question of deciding whether or not a little improvement like a spur line of a railroad should be allowed to come in on a certain alley.

The question came before us last year of deciding how many television towers should be in the District of Columbia, and at what kind of spots they should be located.

A question which has taken many hours of time of a very fine and devoted District Committee in the last week or two is the question of how we shall dispose of the stray dogs from the District pound.

Mr. President, maybe it is sound government to continue to encumber the mind, the time, the energy, the strength of the men and women who comprise the Members of the Congress of the United States with that kind of detail, with that kind of unsubstantial public business, but I think it is very bad democracy, and it is very bad government so to encumber our docket here and to take away our chance, and our opportunity, by that amount of time, to deal with other matters, pressing matters, of vital and of general importance.

Mr. President, I expect to speak at some length, on this matter on Tuesday next. I did want to make these remarks this afternoon and to say this further, that I want to speak with complete approval of the very fine service which has been rendered by the chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], by the chairman of the full committee, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH], by all other members of the District Committee in pressing, in urging, in insisting upon the consideration of this matter, which I think is vital and fundamental. I think that unless we pass it we are going to find ourselves bogged down more and more in the maze of inconsequential public business which here in the District of Columbia comprises the same field as that which would be handled in the city's business, in the school board's business, in the county's business, in the State's business, in any other jurisdiction in this Nation.

I hope that the Congress will pass this measure speedily, and I believe that its passage will result in the doing of very great good in the cause of better and more effective government here in the District, I think and hope we will see a revival of interest in public affairs in the District of Columbia, constituting now 900,000 people, soon to be over a million—a revival of interest in public affairs which in itself will be distinctly worth while.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I want to say a word or two in behalf of the bill which is now before the Senate. Washington is a great city, one of the greatest cities in the United States, a city of 900,000 people, and a city which has the same qualification for local home rule as has any other city in the United States.

I have perhaps a special interest in it because I have lived in the city of Washington for about 20 years altogether, counting the four or five times I have moved in and out of the city of Washington, and I have during all that time regarded the government situation as exceedingly anomalous. Here is a city in which Americans are born and grow up without any right of home rule whatsoever, without any right to participate in the government which controls their daily affairs and has to do with their daily lives. I myself believe that local self-government is almost as important to liberty as is National Government.

I do not believe we can have real freedom in this country without local self government and the right of people to determine the matters which affect them in their daily lives, such as the administration of their schools, the condition of their streets, their various public services, and other things in which every community has a vital interest.

Mr. President, I do not know why the people of Washington were left without the right to vote under the original Constitution. It has often occurred to me that perhaps the experience of mob influence in capital cities such as London and Paris throughout history led our forefathers to believe that the people of Washington should not have the vote which would enable them, by reason of their proximity to the seat of government, to exert a strong influence on the government itself.

Whatever may be the reasons why they were not accorded under the Constitution the right to vote for the Members of Congress and for President, those reasons do not apply to their right to govern themselves in their own local affairs. Certainly the fact that they not only are not governing themselves, but are governed by a body which has no interest in their welfare, or, at least, has no time to take an interest in their welfare, is another reason why the present system is completely unsatisfactory. Congress is simply unable to give its attention to the most vital concerns of the District of Columbia. It is only by happy chance that we are even able to consider this particular bill which affects the entire structure of the Government of the District of Columbia. It is very seldom that any District bill about which there is the slightest controversy can secure attention on the floor of the United States Senate.

The District is governed largely by the District Committee; but the members of that committee are unable to give very much time and attention to District affairs. Such affairs cannot be their first interest or their second interest among the matters which come before them. I see no logical reason why the people of a city the size of Washington should not govern their own affairs. Therefore I feel very strongly that we should adopt a system of home rule for the District of Columbia. I have always felt so, and tried at every opportunity to promote that idea.

I have taken a particular interest in this bill, because if we are to have a city government, we want to have the best possible city government. The bill provides for a city council of 11 members, 9 of whom are to be elected at large, and for a city manager. I think those who have had to do with municipal governments have felt that the city manager form of government has been successful, that it is sound in principle, and that the principle of a small council elected at large is probably the best method of obtaining the proper treatment of the legislative problem.

There is, of course, a danger in any city government. Our experience throughout the history of the United States has not always been very happy with city governments. A city government is a small group elected from among the people. No great attention is centered on the character of those who are elected. Under the ward system very little attention is paid to the character of a man chosen from a small ward. The fact that members of the council are to be elected at large is an improvement, because at least they must appeal to the entire electorate. Therefore they must be men of some standing in the entire community to be successful. By that method we obtain a better type of men, and we center more public attention on those men and on what they are doing. Still there is danger, and always has been, I think, that a single group or gang may get control of a city and engage in some of the practices which we have seen in times past in various American cities.

Under this proposal I think we do what we can to avoid such a situation. In the first place, the nine men are not elected at one time. Five of them are elected for a 4-year term, and four others are elected 2 years later. Still, they may all be controlled by the same party or by the same organization, although I believe that in an election at large it is likely that at least one dissenter will be elected each time among the total number of those who are elected, no matter how large the majority for the successful group may be.

I suggested—and I think it is a wise provision—that there should be added to the council two men appointed by the President of the United States. The United States Government certainly has a very special and peculiar interest in the District of Columbia, a situation which does not exist in any other city in the United States. The Federal Government has an interest in seeing that the city government is satisfactory. I think the United States Government should have a voice—though not a prevailing voice—in the administration of the city.

In the second place, the two men appointed by the President can act as watch-dogs in case the elective process does not operate satisfactorily. Two men will always be on guard as a minority if the group in control starts in the wrong direction or attempts to do things which it should not do. Those two men can at least direct public attention to what is going on, and present the views of a loyal opposition on municipal problems. So I believe that that addition assures a council which will be safe and upon which public attention will be centered, as well as a council which will not be able to do things in secret or apart from the general knowledge of the people of the community.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THYE in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In connection with what the Senator from Ohio has said, one of the provisions of the bill which has elicited my approval is title IV, by which every legislative proposal of the council must first be deposited with the Congress of the United States, thus providing what seems to me to be an ample check against the abuses which have sometimes arisen in other communities.

Mr. TAFT. I think the Senator is correct. That is a very useful safeguard, and one which I take it is required by the constitutional provision giving Congress the right to exercise exclusive legislative authority in all cases over the District of Columbia. We cannot divest ourselves entirely of that right. We must exercise some supervision over the District.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Having served for many years as a member of the District of Columbia Appropriations Subcommittee, I have had many personal experiences with respect to the sad deficiencies which arise from the fact that the people of the District do not have the power to exercise self-governing authority over the normal housekeeping activities of city government. I feel that under the provisions of this bill they will have the opportunity to exercise such authority in a manner which will redound to the benefit of the community, the Capital of the Nation.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I invite attention to one further feature of the bill. I refer to the provision which gives the municipal council the right to borrow money for capital improvements. That right exists in every other city. I was somewhat concerned by the rather broad power given in the first draft. The bill has now been amended so as to provide very definite limitations on the right to borrow. Bonds cannot be sold without submitting them to the public for approval by a majority vote at an election. The bonds which are issued must be issued in installments, so that they will be paid off during the life of the improvement. They cannot be for a longer period than 30 years, nor for a longer period than the life of the particular improvement, which must be certified.

The bonds must be sold at public sale on sealed bids. So we have the usual precautions which are now customary in connection with municipal bonds. It is obvious that when the bonds are issued they will have interest and retirement charges, which will add to the tax rate of the District. I suggested that in the referendum ballot attention might be called to how much the tax rate would be increased by the issue of bonds. However, that suggestion was not adopted.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. In connection with the vital matter of borrowing, which in a sense is encumbering or mortgaging the future of the District and the property in the District, does not the Senator feel that this is something which peculiarly should be entrusted only to officers elected by the citizens who are affected, and that the operation should be surrounded by safeguards so that it can be conducted only after the approving vote of the citizens affected?

Mr. TAFT. I think that is a very wise provision. Yet I believe that the right to borrow for public improvements is a perfectly proper distribution of costs over the generation to come, who will have the full use of such improvements. The danger we wish to avoid in the issuance of bonds is that of having the people still paying for the bonds when there is no longer any improvement. That has happened in a good many American cities in the past. Gradually they came to adopt the kind of provision which is in the bill, which limits the period of the bonds to the life of the improvement, and requires that they be paid off year by year, so that the people will not find, when the improvement is being torn down or replaced by another structure, that they owe a debt which has not been paid off, and which must be refunded.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Before asking my question, I wish to make a statement. In considering this bill the subcommittee found that the distinguished senior Senator from Ohio had been studying the problem for a long time, that he was sympathetic with the idea, and that he had given this particular proposal a great deal of consideration. We are grateful to the Senator from Ohio for coming before the committee and giving us the benefit of several very useful suggestions, which I think have greatly improved the bill.

As the Senator from Ohio has stated, his first suggestion was with respect to two members of the council to be appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate. Another was the provision for the election commission. The provision in the original bill was that the election commission should be named by the council. The Senator from Ohio pointed out that an additional protection to the city and to the Federal Government would be to have members of the election commission named by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and that provision was adopted. All the very helpful and useful suggestions made by the Senator from Ohio in connection with the financial operations of the city—the borrowing of money, and so forth—were considered by the subcommittee and were incorporated in the bill, with the exception of the one the Senator suggested in regard to having on the referendum ballot in the case of proposed bond issues, a statement setting forth the amount of tax increase which would have to be imposed in the event the bonds were issued. We tried to work out some way of handling that matter; but the income of the District of Columbia comes from so many different kinds of taxes and so many different sources that we were unable to determine any way which would give an intelligent picture, as it seemed to us, of the amount of tax increase which a bond issue would require.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I do not at all insist upon that suggestion.

We have to have such an arrangement in Ohio, so I was interested in it; but in Ohio we have a tax limitation, and the effect of placing such a statement on the referendum ballot would be to indicate whether the bond issue would increase the rate beyond the tax limitation. So in Ohio we have a special reason for it. But I see no reason why such a provision should be included in the pending bill.

Mr. President, I have no more to say, except that if we wish to make a real improvement in the government of this city, the Capital City of the United States of America—which should be a model city for the entire Nation, although it has not been—it seems to me that this bill will bring about that result, and is well worked out to accomplish its purpose.

Mr. President, I feel very strongly that the bill should be passed by the Senate and by the House of Representatives.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. KEFAUVER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LONG in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on Finance:

Addington B. Campbell, of Port Norris, N. J., to be collector of internal revenue for the first district of New Jersey, in place of Harry L. Maloney, deceased;

Leo E. Trombly, of Altona, N. Y., to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 7, with headquarters at Ogdensburg, N. Y.;

Richard W. McSpedon, of Yonkers, N. Y., to be surveyor of customs in customs collection district No. 10, with headquarters at New York, N. Y., to fill an existing vacancy; and Clara E. Sarvela, of Duluth, Minn., to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 36, with headquarters at Duluth, Minn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

UNITED STATES MARITIME COMMISSION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Maj. Gen. Philip B. Fleming, United States Army, retired, to be a member of the United States Maritime Commission for the term expiring April 15, 1955.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I understand that yesterday a request was made that the nomination be passed over. However, I do not believe there is any present request that it be passed over further.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, yesterday I asked that the nomination of Maj. Gen. Philip B. Fleming, United States Army, retired, to be a member of the Maritime Commission, be passed over. However, it is perfectly agreeable to have the nomination confirmed at this time. There is no objection.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nomination be confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION—NOMINATION PASSED OVER

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Thomas Chalmers Buchanan, of Pennsylvania, to be a member of the Federal Power Commission for the remainder of the term expiring June 22, 1952.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask that this nomination be passed over until the next call of the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination will be passed over until the next call of the Executive Calendar.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I believe the Senator from Kansas, and perhaps other Senators, are opposed to the confirmation of the nomination.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am quite satisfied that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL], who at that time was acting minority leader, was requested by a colleague to ask that the nomination go over until next Tuesday. My feeling is that by that time, possibly, the situation will be ironed out.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Yes; I think so.

Mr. WHERRY. But until that happens, I respectfully request that the nomination be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination will be passed over.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, in reference to the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska and the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, I merely wish to say that the statement the Senator from Nebraska has made of the situation regarding the nomination is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes; it is correct, I am sure. I wish to make the RECORD unmistakably clear that the Senator from Kansas was, in that connection, acting as minority leader, and that I had asked him to see that the nomination was passed over, but that was at the request of another colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith of the confirmation of the nomination of Maj. Gen. Philip B. Fleming.

That completes the Executive Calendar.

RECESS UNTIL TUESDAY

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I now move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon on Tuesday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Tuesday, May 31, 1949, at 12 o'clock meridian.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1843. The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 714) entitled "An act to provide for comprehensive planning, for site acquisition in and outside of the District of Columbia, and for the design of Federal building projects outside of the District of Columbia; to authorize the transfer of jurisdiction over certain lands between certain departments and agencies of the United States; and to provide certain additional authority needed in connection with the construction, management, and operation of Federal public buildings; and for other purposes"; requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. HOLLAND, Mr. CHAPMAN, Mr. CAIN, and Mr. MARTIN to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

FEDERAL PROPERTY AND ADMINISTRATIVE SERVICES ACT OF 1949

PECOS RIVER COMPACT

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 3334) to grant the consent of the United States to the Pecos River compact, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to grant the consent of Congress to the Pecos River compact."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Florida explain the amendment?

Mr. PETERSON. This bill was passed by the House and by the other body. The other body struck out the words "United States" and inserted the word "Congress." The Constitution uses the word "Congress"; therefore the other body is correct.

Mr. ARENDS. In other words, it is a technical improvement.

Mr. PETERSON. A technical improvement; that is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PETERSON]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ALASKA SHIPPING

Mr. JACKSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks and include certain material from the United States Maritime Commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. JACKSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, in the first session of the Eightieth Congress, I sponsored an Interim Shipping Act known as Public Law 12, which became effective March 7, 1947, and expired on June 30, 1948.

The purpose of this legislation was twofold. First, since the economy of the Territory of Alaska is so largely dependent on the cost of transportation into the territory, the law provided a temporary subsidy by making ships available to operating companies at a dollar a year in order that freight rates might be consistent with a healthy Alaskan economy. Second, because shipping to Alaska had theretofor been largely conducted during abnormal wartime conditions, the act was to provide a period of time in which an accurate study could be made of the costs of operation of shipping companies under the agreement. It was hoped that the study would provide a yardstick for the preparation of permanent legislation.

In furtherance of these two purposes, the Maritime Commission was required, under section 2 of the law, "to report to the Congress at intervals of not greater than 90 days all contracts, charters, and other arrangements entered into pursuant to this act, and the details and source of all operations which have been conducted thereunder."

In my opinion, the Commission did not comply fully with the letter, and certainly not with the spirit of this provision of the law. They failed to report to the Congress regularly and adequately the over-all operating conditions of the companies under the act. Their reports told primarily of the arrivals and departures of their ships, which did not provide adequately, in my opinion, the yardstick which the Congress was looking for.

The operating companies under the act have been the Alaska Transportation Co., the Alaska Steamship Co., the Northland Transportation Co., and the Santa Ana Steamship Co.

For over a year, I have been making repeated requests of the Maritime Commission for a detailed accounting of the business activities of these four companies. Finally, in January of this year, at my urging, the Maritime Commission undertook a complete audit of the books of the four companies. Five months later, the Commission submitted to me a preliminary report, which I am submitting for the record. It includes financial statements which are in part the results of the Commission's audits of the Alaska Steamship Co. and the Northland Transportation Co., and in part the statements submitted by those companies—since the Maritime Commission had not completed its audits of all of the companies concerned—of the finances of the Alaska Terminal & Stevedoring Co., owned jointly by the Alaska Steamship Co., some of its officers and employees, and by the Northland Transportation Co., and also of the finances of the Ketchikan Wharf Co., which is wholly owned by the Alaska Steamship Co.

I am submitting, in addition, a schedule of salaries and fees paid by the four companies, as submitted by the Maritime Commission, and the financial results of operations of these companies, also as submitted by the Commission.

A reading of the report will show that there are some very substantial discrepancies between the statements submitted by the companies and the audit made by the Commission. It will be noted that in the report, the Alaska Steamship Co.'s statement showed a profit of $678,093 before Federal income taxes, and the audit of the Maritime Commission shows a profit of $1,348,716.64—nearly a 100-percent discrepancy.

The Commission states:

> The principal items making up this difference of over $670,000 are the inclusion of a profit of approximately $180,000 from ship repairs made in the company's own yards which had been excluded in the company's presentation; a reduction of approximately $300,000 in the amount of overhead as allocated by the company, and the exclusion by our auditors of approximately $160,000 covering depreciation on the company's owned vessels.

In the case of the Northland Transportation, there is a discrepancy of $8,591.69 between the company's statement and the Commission's audit. This discrepancy is not explained in the Commission's preliminary report.

I would like to invite the attention of the Congress to the fact that, in the case of the Alaska Steamship Co., ship repairs were undertaken on a cost-plus-20-percent basis. For some reason, although adequate ship-repair facilities were available in the area, the company failed to let the work out on the basis of competitive bidding. Instead, they engaged in their own ship-repair business, which netted them a substantial profit.

It will be noted from an examination of the report that the Alaska Steamship Co. and the Northland Transportation Co. did not limit their activites to shipping operations alone, but, through stock and individual ownerships, were engaged in stevedoring and ship-repair work, which netted the companies a very substantial profit on the basis of an unaudited report received by the Commission. I believe this matter should be thoroughly investigated and a complete audit made of the books of all the companies in order that the Congress be fully advised regarding these transactions.

Mr. Speaker, I have requested the chairman of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee to make a thorough and complete investigation of the operations of all of the companies under the act. The chairman has assured me that the matter will be thoroughly investigated at an early date by his committee. I hope that, as a result of these hearings, the public will be fully appraised of the operations under the interim act, and, with that information, I hope that the Congress will have a better understanding of the kind of legislation which will be needed to provide adequate and proper transportation to Alaska. I wish to state that I shall not cease my activities in this matter until both the Congress and the public are satisfied that both the letter and the spirit of Public Law 12 have been complied with.

UNITED STATES MARITIME COMMISSION,
Washington, May 17, 1949.

Subject: Alaska Steamship Co. and Northland Transportation Co. combined operations under agreement for emergency interim operation of water transportation service, to, from, and within the Territory of Alaska.

The Honorable HENRY M. JACKSON,
Member, Appropriations Committee,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN JACKSON: Pursuant to your requests, there is transmitted herewith a financial statement designated exhibit A reflecting the combined income of the Alaska Steamship Co. and the Northland Transportation Co., together with their affiliated company, the Alaska Steamship Co., Ketchikan Wharf Co., derived from operations under the emergency interim agreement.

Attention is invited to the fact that the operations of the Alaska Steamship Co. under the interim agreement embraced the period from May 1, 1947, to December 31, 1948, while the operations of the Northland Transportation Co. covered the period from June 1, 1947, to August 31, 1948.

Exhibit A, referred to above, reflects combined net profit of $1,858,841.12 from shipping operations under the interim agreement, before Federal income tax, composed of a profit of $1,546,735.53 applicable to operations of the Alaska Steamship Co., those of its affiliate, Alaska Terminal & Stevedoring Co., and its wholly owned subsidiary, Ketchikan Wharf Co., insofar as they relate to operations of Alaska Steamship Co., as shown on supporting schedule A-1, and a profit of $312,105.59 applicable to operation of Northland Transportation Co. and the related portion of its affiliate, Alaska Terminal & Stevedoring Co., as reflected on schedule A-2.

From schedule A-1 it will be noted that net profit from shipping operations before Federal income tax of the Alaska Steamship Co. as computed after our audit is $1,348,716.64. This compares with a profit of $678,093 before Federal income taxes computed from statements submitted by the company. The principal items making up this difference of over $670,000 are the inclusion of a profit of approximately $180,000 from ship repairs made in the company's own yards which had been excluded in the company's presentation; a reduction of approximately $300,000 in the amount of overhead as allocated by the company, and the exclusion by our auditors of approximately $160,000 covering depreciation on the company's owned vessels. Attention is directed to the fact that ship repairs were charged to vessel operations at cost, plus a 20-percent profit. In its financial statements, the company had allocated this profit to other than vessel operations. In addition to the items mentioned, profits from operations of the Alaska Terminal & Stevedoring Co. in the amount of $191,754.29 and profits of the Ketchikan Wharf Co. of $6,264.60 are also added to the Alaska Steamship Co. income for the purpose of reflecting the total profit of the affiliated interests. The Ketchikan Wharf Co. is a wholly owned subsidiary, but in the case of the Alaska Terminal & Stevedoring Co., approximately 49 percent of the stock is owned by the Alaska Steamship Co., the remainder being held by officers or employees of Alaska and by Northland.

With respect to Northland, the profits computed from statements submitted by the company were $179,239.39 as compared with $187,831.08 computed by our auditors as shown on schedule A-2. For the purpose of reflecting the total income to the affiliated interests, a profit of $124,274.51 of the Alaska Terminal & Stevedoring Co., representing the portion attributable to services rendered by that company for Northland has also been set forth and shown in the total profit accruing to Northland.

The operating results reflected on exhibit A and supporting schedules as concerns Alaska Steamship Co. and Northland Transportation Co. are the results of audits recently completed by the field staff of this office, pursuant to the terms of the emergency interim agreement, whereas the results reflected with respect to the Alaska Terminal & Stevedoring Co. and the Ketchikan Wharf Co. have not been audited by this office but reflect the results as shown on the books of account of the respective companies.

The Alaska Steamship Co. chartered 15 vessels from the Commission at the rate of $1 per annum, which it operated together with 4 owned vessels under the emergency interim agreement. During the period of the agreement there were 83 voyages completed with chartered vessels and 70 voyages completed with owned vessels.

The Northland Transportation Co. chartered 5 vessels from the Commission at the rate of $1 per annum, which it operated under the emergency interim agreement, together with 1 vessel (S. S. Alaska) assigned to it by the Alaska Steamship Co., for which no charter hire was paid to the latter. This operator completed 40 voyages with the 5 vessels chartered from the Commission and 24 voytages with the S. S. Alaska.

There is also attached hereto a statement designated exhibit B reflecting salaries paid, during the period of the emergency interim agreement, to officers of the Alaska Steamship Co. and to the partners of Northland Transportation Co., and the portion thereof that is applicable to the operations of such agreement.

In the case of the Alaska operations the emergency interim agreement is the motivating instrument, whereas the ships sales demise 303 bare-boat charter agreement is the activating instrument providing the means whereby the operators were furnished with additional vessels for use in the trade. The emergency interim agreement provides, among other things, that with respect to the determination of profits and capital employed, the terms and conditions set forth in the ships sales demise 303 agreement, which were incorporated by reference in the emergency interim agreement, shall prevail except to the extent where such terms and conditions are expressly in conflict with the emergency interim agreement, in which event the terms of the latter shall prevail. The emergency interim agreement further provides, among other things, that the rights and obligations of each party thereto shall in every respect and at all times be several and not joint.

In this connection, it appears appropriate to point out that paragraph (c) of clause 30 of part II of bare-boat charter agreement ship sales demise 303 provides, among other things, that in the calculation of the cumulative net voyage profit for the purposes of determining the amount of additional charter hire payable to the owner, sums paid or payable to an interested person or related company in connection with the operation of the vessels thereunder during the period with respect to which such calculation is made shall be taken into account only if such agreements or arrangements have been approved by the owner, and then only in such amount as the owner shall deem to be fair and reasonable. In the determination of additional charter hire under that agreement, therefore, the operating results of subsidiary and affiliated companies which render service or furnish stores, supplies, equipment, materials, repairs, or facilities in connection with the operation of the vessels thereunder would normally not be consolidated with those of the operator.

In the instance of the Alaska Terminal & Stevedoring Co. our auditors found that the facilities, other than stevedoring, furnished by that company were at the going port rates. The stevedoring services rendered were in accordance with the terms of existing agreements between the Alaska Steamship Co., Northland Transportation Co., and the Alaska Terminal & Stevedoring Co., each individually. Notwithstanding this, there are several matters pertaining to this operation disclosed by the audit with which I am not satisfied, including the handling by the Alaska Steamship Co. and Northland of the stevedoring and terminal operations and ship repairs. Answers to my questions will require an analysis by our technical staff, and I am, therefore, having this done, and a further report prepared covering the results of our investigation which will be furnished you.

It is to be understood that the exhibits and schedules attached hereto reflect operating results on a combined basis to show income to an affiliation of interests and are not to be construed as representing the final determinations subsequently to be made by the Commission with respect to settlements with either the Alaska Steamship Co. or the Northland Transportation Co. in connection with their respective operations under the terms of the emergency interim agreement.

Sincerely yours,

GRENVILLE MELLEN,
Vice Chairman.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HINSHAW asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include the remarks of Hon. Oswald Ryan on the occasion of his third induction as a member of the Civil Aeronautics Board.

"ALL THAT GLITTERS IS NOT GOLD"

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, recently the Senate Banking and Currency Committee became bored when consideration of a bill to provide for a world free market in gold was before it. Shades of William Jennings Bryan and his historic Cross of Gold oratory! The market for gold is far from free in this country. It is illegal to have in one's possession monetary gold.

In the 456 years since Columbus discovered America the value of the gold mined in the world has been $40,000,000,000. Beginning next July 1, the Federal Government plans to spend forty-five billions. The United States has twenty-four billions of the present gold, most of it stored underground at Fort Knox, and it represents only a little more than half of a single year's cash spending by the Federal Government. With the price of gold pegged at $35 an ounce, most gold miners say they cannot dig it for that. As it is, the money supply now totals one hundred and sixty-six billions—four times what it was in 1933, when we went off the gold standard—and the whole economy of this country is set up on a new high scale. That is why the Government feels able to swing a volume of annual spending greater than the whole national income in 1933. Credit must have been one of the greatest inventions of all times.

GERHART EISLER

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, yesterday this House approved a bill appropriating more than $5,000,000,000 to be expended as aid, financial and otherwise, for the benefit of foreign countries. Included in yesterday's House-approved bill was an item of nearly $1,000,000,000 for Great Britain—to support the economy and the government of that nation.

This morning an official of the British Government refused to turn over to the United States authorities a fugitive from American justice—Gerhart Eisler—a known Communist who has been engaged in efforts to overthrow our Government.

What gratitude! What a shining example of international cooperation! What a great demonstration of appreciation by the British Government of the sacrifices we have been making to aid the British people.

Can it be that the British, too, are not interested in catching "red herrings," or in putting them where they belong?

CENTRAL VALLEY, CALIF., POWER DEVELOPMENT

Mr. WELCH of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. WELCH of California. Mr. Speaker, the following editorial will be appreciated by all who sincerely believe in the great Central Valley multiple hydroelectric power development well on its way to completion by the Federal Government for the primary benefit of farmers, irrigationists, and water users in the Central Valley project area of California:

[From the San Francisco (Calif.) News of May 21, 1949]

GOVERNOR URGED TO BOOST RECLAMATION

Congressman RICHARD WELCH, of San Francisco, expressly called upon Governor Warren to exert his influence with the California congressional delegation to support the United States Bureau of Reclamation in water and power development in this State.

Such a policy would be in line with the findings of the Hoover Commission which held that the United States Army Engineer Corps withdraw from all projects primarily concerned with conservation, including power development.

Governor Warren, in a recent speech at Los Angeles, declared western power development in the hydroelectric field must be chiefly by public agencies because the necessity of water conservation requires multiple use of water resources. Private capital, he pointed out, cannot undertake the large expenditures involved in such development.

The Bureau of Reclamation is concerned primarily with water, land, and wildlife conservation. In promotion of these aims it seeks to encourage wider use of lands for food production by providing irrigation water for otherwise arid areas. To make irrigation water as cheap as possible for farmers it develops power generation facilities in connection with water storage. Sale of the electric power helps recover the cost of the projects and hence reduces the proportion of cost that must be repaid from sale of irrigation water.

This is essentially the difference between projects built by the reclamation service and those constructed by the United States engineers.

Although the Governor, in his Los Angeles speech, did not specifically link the Bureau of Reclamation with the public power development he recommended, it was clear from his remarks that he had that in mind. The Army engineers, in projecting "flood control" dams high up in the Sierra cannot assure multiple purpose development. Nor can they recover costs of the construction. Therefore, they are incapable of accomplishing the kind of development Governor Warren advocates.

We believe Representative WELCH is justified in asking the Governor to exert his official influence in Washington to secure support for the water and power program of the Bureau of Reclamation. That program is essentially included in the Central Valley project, whose completion is so vital to the future welfare of California.

COMMUNISM AT HOME AND ABROAD—GERHART EISLER

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the British courts seem to be becoming as pro-Communist as our Atomic Commission.

On yesterday, while some of the Members of Congress were falling over themselves to appropriate billions of dollars to give Great Britain, out of the American taxpayers' pockets, the courts of that country were releasing Gerhart Eisler, probably the most dangerous Communist who ever plotted the overthrow of this Government.

I was on the Committee on Un-American Activities when Gerhart Eisler was brought before it. He refused to be sworn on the ground that he claimed to be a refugee from persecution. Almost immediately, a Negro by the name of Nowell, an ex-Communist took the stand. He said that the Communists had sent him to Moscow to a school of revolution where they were being taught how to overthrow this Government. It got so bad that Nowell quit the Communist Party, turned state's evidence, and told the whole story to the committee.

We asked him if he had ever seen Gerhart Eisler before. He said, "Oh, yes; he was an instructor in that school of communism in Moscow all the time I was over there."

I realize that the British will probably come back and say that we have no right to criticize them so long as our Atomic Commission educates Communists at Government expense, but I wanted to express my disappointment at this interference on the part of the British courts.

DOG IN THE MANGER

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minuate and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, most of the Members of the House when going from the Capitol over to the office buildings have noticed the contractor's preparations for repair of this Chamber, and noticed the barriers put down where we used to park our cars. I cannot help but think of two old adages: One was about the dog in the manger, and the other was about the old hog first getting his feet in the trough.

The Capitol faces New Jersey Avenue. The House Office Buildings stand on the south side of B Street, which runs east and west. On our way from the Capitol to our offices and before we reach B Street, we find a curving street running from New Jersey to the west, and off this curving street is another very short street running to the southwest and ending in B Street.

Over the years it has been customary for reporters, for secretaries, for Congressmen, and those having business at the Capitol or in the House Office Buildings to park their cars on each side of those two curving streets, both being one-way streets.

Many of us have noted the elaborate preparation of the contractor for the construction work he is about to do on the Capitol. For the last week or two he has been trying to monopolize these two streets where so many park their cars. Like the old hog, he has got his feet in the trough; like the dog in the manger, he is preventing the use of space which he cannot and does not himself use. First he had the policemen tell people not to park on portions of these two curving streets.

I talked to Mr. Lynn, the Architect of the Capitol, about the situation; he did not know anything about it; and to Mr. Callahan, the Sergeant at Arms. Mr. Callahan said: "Park your car over there where you and others have always been accustomed to park."

The contractor was not content with having the policeman order folks not to park their cars on these two streets. He or someone in his interest put up barriers which occupy the places where individuals formerly parked. So what have we? We have a contractor hogging space on two public streets which he does not use, which he cannot use, and where the only result is for him to get his feet in the trough when he cannot, as did the old hog, drink the swill therein.

It is seldom that one sees the like of such selfishness, but he probably has a cost-plus contract and perhaps the taxpayers will find him charging for putting out and removing these yellow barriers which accomplish nothing except to prevent people parking their cars in a place which he—I repeat—does not and cannot use.

Will the Custodian of Public Grounds or Joe Callahan kindly get those barriers out of the way so that people having business in the Capitol, in the House Office Buildings, can use the space which no one else is using, but on which whoever put out those yellow barriers, is just squatting? That will give those who have business at the Capitol and with their Congressmen an opportunity to use available space which is not needed by the contractor.

I know it is a popular peacetime sport to kick Congressmen around and see if you can get something on them and interfere with their necessary activities, but why in the world that contractor can put those barriers up there and not use the space, I cannot understand. To me it is just plain "dog in the manger."

(Mr. BIEMILLER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include certain statements by J. Donald Kingsley, Acting Federal Security Administrator.)

THE PRESIDENT'S HEALTH PROGRAM

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, the American Medical Association has been attacking President Truman's program for national health insurance as a proposal for socialized medicine or state medicine.

Some very interesting comments on this viewpoint were made this week before a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare by J. Donald Kingsley, Acting Federal Security Administrator.

Mr. Kingsley expressed the view that this proposed legislation is the way to avoid state medicine instead of the way to get it. I would like to quote briefly from his statement:

> At the outset, however, I want to stress the conviction that unless a comprehensive system of prepayment such as that provided in S. 1679 is established, it will be impossible to meet the Nation's medical needs without an ever-increasing measure of state medicine.
> The extent to which Government already is involved in the direct provision of medical care to individuals is often overlooked, I am afraid, in our zeal to identify our system for the care of the sick with our business system of private enterprise. Perhaps it would be more useful to our purpose if we were to face frankly the fact that medical care does not rest upon the same basis at all. Incidentally, I think it would be far fairer to private enterprise.
> By its very nature medical care is uneconomic. In modern times, it has never rested on the rule of the market place, because the public interest has required that illness be treated somehow, whether the individual could afford it or not. But while we never have relied inclusively upon the rule of supply and demand, neither have we worked out a rational and reliable substitute for it which would provide a sound economic basis for our medical system. Instead, medical care has been financed, from the earliest times, in a haphazard way. From the beginning, the economic basis of medicine has been a loosely defined triple standard: First, a rough-and-ready sliding scale of prices for the well-to-do, depending upon how well-to-do and adjusted arbitrarily in individual cases by the physician or the hospital; second, private charity in various forms, both organized and unorganized, for the medically indigent, meaning those who are self-supporting except in emergency; and, third, Government medicine and various forms of public charity for the poor. It is a makeshift system that "just growed."
> In spite of these catch-as-catch-can financial arrangements, the medical profession has made remarkable progress. This is not a tribute to the system of payment, however, but to the devotion of the medical profession and to our national readiness to improvise. In this case, we appear to have improvised ourselves into a situation that almost nobody likes.
> Without a workable economic base upon which the private practice of medicine and our voluntary hospital system could improve and expand at a pace consistent with the advance of medical knowledge and general social standards, we have turned over to Government a greater and greater share of responsibility. Almost all of our improvisation, in fact, has been in this direction, until today some 24,000,000 citizens are receiving various kinds and degrees of medical care from the Federal Government alone, according to the Hoover Commission.
> Today, Government owns and operates three-quarters of all the hospital beds in the United States. Government employs directly thousands of American doctors and pays fees to many more. In Government hospitals and with doctors on the public pay roll in whole or in part, the taxpayers finance full medical care for all members of the armed forces and their dependents and for all veterans with service-connected disabilities; hospital care for all needy veterans and for merchant seamen; and complete care for tubercular, mental and other chronic patients. Government pays the cost of limited medical care for those on public relief rolls. In addition, the taxpayers carry the full load in that vast field of medical service known as public health, and provide large sums to support medical research and education.
> If you add all this up, you will find that Government today is providing a large share of the total cost of medical care for a substantial proportion of the people, and that it is doing so in very large measure through state medicine, in the strictest sense of the term. Furthermore, it is evident that the acceleration of this development in recent years has been phenomenal. There is no reason to suppose that it can be halted by any partial or makeshift expedient.
> It seems to me that the implications of this are starkly clear. I sincerely believe that we have gone so far along this road, impelled by irresistible circumstance rather than by any design, that the real issue is already quite different than it is usually presented. The real issue as I see it is not between voluntary, private health insurance and a national system based on our social insurance experience, but rather between national health insurance and state medicine. I say this not because I am opposed to voluntary insurance, for I am not, but because I am firmly and honestly convinced that nothing short of the social insurance method can prevent the further—and eventually the complete—substitution of state for private medicine. On the other hand, I believe that social insurance can prevent it, because it would establish exactly the thing that has always been lacking and which has rendered private medicine incapable of doing the full job. That is, a sound, firm, reliable economic foundation upon which private medicine can expand and flourish.

Mr. Kingsley then gave the reasons why voluntary health insurance cannot provide the kind of medical care the Nation needs and therefore cannot stop the advance of state medicine. He said in part:

One difficulty with voluntary health insurance is that it costs too much for most people to buy, and it cannot pay its own way on lower premiums. Since the AMA's recent conversion, we are told that health insurance has made gigantic strides and now affords protection to 52,000,000 Americans, or one-third of the Nation. This may be true. But the question arises, What are they protected against? And the answer is that less than 2½ percent have anything even approaching the comprehensive protection that is provided for S. 1679. Other voluntary insurance subscribers have protection ranging from next to nothing under policies with a great deal of fine print, to limited protection under several different policies for hospital, surgical, and medical care. The cost is in proportion to protection, and it is not cheap; if it were, far more than a third of the people might be expected to buy such little packages.

Another pertinent question would be, Who is protected under voluntary insurance? As with the distribution of medical personnel and facilities, so it is with voluntary insurance policies; you find them where the money is, not where the need is greatest. Most voluntary insurance policies are issued by Blue Cross hospitalization plans—the AMA says 32,000,000 of them—providing limited insurance for hospital care only. About 60 percent of these policies are held by citizens of six rich industrial States which contain about 36 percent of the total population of the United States. Only about 17 percent of Blue Cross members live in Southern and Western States with 45 percent of the population. Less than 3 percent of the rural population belong.

Even granting the validity of the AMA's own figures, which have not been noted for objectivity in this regard, two-thirds of our people have no protection of any kind under voluntary insurance. And this after 20 years of intensive advertising and selling.

It may be that by helping to defray the administrative costs out of taxes, by subsidizing the coverage of those who cannot or will not pay the premiums, and by appropriating public funds for a high-pressure advertising campaign, it would be possible to bring most of the population eventually into these privately controlled plans. This, of course, would achieve the same result as social insurance, but it would be infinitely more costly and would raise serious questions of public policy. Anything short of this, however, would fail to meet the problem and probably would lead only to greater acceleration of the trend toward state medicine.

On this score, I agree with the conclusion that was reached years ago by the American Medical Association, that, if we are going to adopt any form of health insurance, we should go all the way and embrace compulsory national health insurance. They contended then, as we do now, that experience in other countries had proved that voluntary insurance was totally inadequate and could not be otherwise.

Mr. Kingsley concluded his testimony with a strong affirmative explanation of the way national health insurance would benefit the country. He said:

S. 1679, on the other hand, offers a real and lasting solution to all of the major problems I outlined at the opening of this discussion. First, it takes full cognizance of the shortages which exist today in medical manpower and facilities, the extent and seriousness of which are known, and makes provision for Federal assistance to the States on a scale sufficient to meet them. This will help to wipe out the great accumulated deficit of supply which has resulted inevitably from the inability of our people to buy the medical care they should have.

As I suggested, however, the finest medical service is of little value, no matter where or in what amount, unless it can be maintained economically. Title VII of S. 1679 deals with this problem in the only effective way I know, by applying the method of social insurance which we have tried and tested for more than a dozen years.

By this method, it would establish a firm, dependable economic foundation under the whole structure of private medical practice. It would result in the establishment and the effective maintenance of doctors, hospitals and all other health personnel and facilities wherever they were justified by the number, not the wealth, of prospective patients. For the first time, it would make it worth while for doctors to use their talents where they are most urgently needed. No longer would the doctor be forced to hold a stethoscope upon the patient's heart and pocketbook at the same time, and adjust his fees accordingly. No longer would he feel compelled to reserve the prescription of expensive treatments and drugs, regardless of their effectiveness, to those whose wealth permits their use. Instead, he would be completely free, for the first time, to consider each patient solely on the basis of professional judgment and not with the appraisal of a bill collector.

As for the patient, no longer would he be compelled to consider the cost of illness first and its consequences later. No longer would he feel hesitant, for fear of the cost, about going to the doctor at the first sign of illness, and thereby reaping the incalculable benefits of modern preventive medicine.

It is hardly necessary for me, Mr. Chairman, to picture for you all the endless chain of beneficial results which would flow automatically from the mere fact that, upon the enactment of this bill, almost all of the people in the United States would have the purchasing power with which to buy all the medical care they need.

But still there are those who fear this program, who contend that it would regiment the doctor, interfere with the freedom of the patient, destroy the standards of medical care, and lead to socialism.

I submit that these are fearful phantoms, and that not a single one of them could possibly materialize under the terms of this bill. These terms are explicit and plain. Its administrative provisions guarantee the widest decentralization of authority, with full representation of both doctors and laymen. They assure that the most important decisions affecting doctors and patients will be determined by their own local representatives, in their own communities. And to make the assurance doubly binding, the bill specifically spells out and guarantees all the freedoms which we are told it would take away.

It seems plain to me that only by this method of social insurance can we effectively shore up our voluntary hospitals and our system of private medical practice, and forestall the need for a further extension of state medicine. We are moving fast in that direction, and I sincerely hope that the President's program will not be delayed too long.

Mr. Speaker, I hope those who have been disturbed by the charge that the President is proposing socialized medicine will give thought to Mr. Kingsley's arguments, because it seems to me that they soundly refute such charges. The supporters of this legislation firmly believe it will not only strengthen our medical care, but will strengthen our American system. That is why the gentleman from Michigan, Congressman DINGELL, and I have introduced H. R. 4312 and H. R. 4313—companion bills to S. 1679.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIEMILLER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. I have asked for time to speak on a certain subject next Thursday, may I say to the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin, and I shall take that time to bring to the attention of the House and the gentleman from Wisconsin some of the background thinking of Mr. J. Donald Kingsley, who expressed the opinion of the administration on national health insurance, that somehow seems to have escaped the public press and has evidently escaped the attention of the gentleman, because at that time I shall bring his own statements, his own books, his own writings to the Congress to demonstrate clearly by his own statements that he believes in socialized medicine, using the language "socialized medicine" just as I have stated it here, and that he believes there is no possibility of our having a system of proper health service without nationalization of hospitals and free public clinics all over America.

In view of the fact that he has stated his approval, as I understand it, of the statements made by J. Donald Kingsley before the Senate committee, may I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin whether or not he believes in a system of nationalization?

Mr. BIEMILLER. I shall be very happy to answer the question raised by my colleague from Wisconsin. I have repeatedly stated in many instances that I do not believe in the nationalization of hospitals; that I do not believe in the nationalization of medicine; that I do not want a system of socialized medicine, and that is why I am proud to be one of the sponsors of the President's health program.

Mr. KEEFE. Then may I say to the gentleman, I think he will get a great deal of enlightenment out of the statements which I shall present for his edification and the edification of the Congress and the public generally as to the attitude of the man who would most largely be called upon to handle and supervise and administer the program which the gentleman advocates.

Mr. BIEMILLER. I shall be very happy to listen to the gentleman from Wisconsin next week.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIEMILLER. I am happy to yield to the distinguished majority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Might I suggest to my friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] that it will be also very interesting, and I shall sit here with pleasure listening to him to find out if he breaks down the economic set-up of the families of America, which is the basis of any sound society and sound government, the home life and the family life, and if he will talk about the 12 percent of the families of America whose total income is $1,000 a year or less, and about the 17 percent of the families of America whose total income is between $1,000 and $2,000, and of the 21 percent of the families of America whose total income is between $2,000 and $3,000 a year, the 50 percent of the families of America, embracing over 70,000,000 of our people, the backbone of our country, and what their plight is when they have sickness in the families of their loved ones. Their loved ones are just as near and dear to them as my loved ones are when there is serious illness in my family, or even slight illness. I want the best medical care possible for my loved ones. I have taken no position publicly, because I am sufficiently experienced in legislation, after 21 years in this body to know that legislation, as it should be in a democracy, is a series of compromises. I helped draft the Social Security Act in 1935, and I was called a Socialist, because I favored it. And it originated in the State of the gentleman from Wisconsin, in the mind of the late Senator Robert La Follette, Sr., who, in his day, when I was a youngster in New England, was called the most sinister figure in America. But he was really one of the great progressives of America. The things that he advocated were condemned as vicious radicalism and socialism and everything else, yet they have become law, and are now orthodox conservatism. I hope my friend will discuss that, and also discuss what we should do and what steps we should take in order to try and solve the problem of economic insecurity facing over 70,000,000 fine Americans and 50 percent of the family life of America.

Mr. BIEMILLER. I thank my very good friend, the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, for his contribution. The people of Wisconsin will appreciate his tribute to our beloved statesman, the late Senator Robert M. La Follette, Sr. I want to advise the House, as I think most of the Members know, that at the present time a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, whose chairman is the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PRIEST], is holding hearings on the President's national health program in an effort to accomplish exactly the process to which the gentleman from Massachusetts referred. It will be our endeavor to get the best advice possible from everyone, and work out the most suitable bill we can.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BIEMILLER. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. I will say in response to the statement made by my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] that he does not have to tell me anything about the work of the late senior Senator from Wisconsin, the Honorable Robert M. La Follette, and I am very familiar with the fact, as one who learned at his footstool, that my State led the Nation in the field of progressive legislation, and that at that time he and some of us who followed him in our thinking at that time were called dirty names. But I want the gentleman to know that in what I shall say next Thursday I am going to try to advise you of the mental processes and thinking of the gentleman who, it is proposed, is to be put in charge of this program, taking into consideration what he was writing on his own some years ago and not what he is saying today. I am not going to be able to give you the answer as to how we are going to take care of the problem, which I very well know about. Very obviously your party has not had the answer, because, if I read the papers correctly, you have abandoned any effort to enact a health program in this session of the Congress. I want the gentleman to know that so far as I am concerned I am aware of that program, and I have as much solicitude in my heart for the health of this Nation as does the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I think my record in this Congress will indicate that I have implemented that thought along a dozen different lines so as to bring health facilities to the people of this country in a manner which they can afford. I do not want the gentleman to let it appear that I am in opposition to the thinking of those people attempting honestly to bring expanded health services to the people of this country, because I am not, but I do not believe the gentleman has the answer nor do I think the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BIEMILLER] who has just addressed us has the answer. Neither do I think the answer is involved in the proposal you have apparently now abandoned so far as this session of Congress is concerned. But I think we ought to know who the people are that we propose to have administer these programs. Then we can perhaps get some concept of what the motivating influence behind a lot of these programs really is.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIEMILLER. I yield to the very able gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. As to the proposal the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] says we have abandoned, of course the gentleman knows that the message on the state of the Union delivered at the beginning of a Congress covers the entire Congress.

Mr. KEEFE. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. This is one session. I agree with the gentleman. The gentleman says that no one has the complete answer. I think that is fair. It is the operation of democratic processes that will bring about the answer, and then, if in the light of experience what we do is shown to be not complete, we start to improve further.

You can compare this to social security legislation. Look at the large groups we had to exclude from it in 1935. We had to exclude the employees of charitable, religious, and educational institutions, because they feared it would be a precedent for the taxation of property then and now exempt from taxation. That did not appeal to me personally, but I recognized the fear, and they were eliminated. The farmers were eliminated. I recognize the administrative difficulty, but people who live on a farm, if they live long enough, get old just the same as persons living anywhere else. Other classes were excluded.

The result is what? The late President Roosevelt, and he is one of the great immortals of all time, was called every name under the sun by those who opposed everything he first proposed. Some of us who fought shoulder to shoulder with him also were called those names. When he recommended social security the charge of socialism was hurled at him, and the same charge was hurled at him in regard to everything else he recommended.

We had hearings in the Committee on Ways and Means. They took many weeks. We heard all sides, and we sat in executive session and compromises were made, as they have to be made on all great progressive steps. Now, 14 years later, we are considering additional coverages under the social security program, and some groups who 14 years ago opposed being included appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means asking that they now be included. Public opinion within that group has changed. I recognize that and, again, that is democracy in action.

The same thing applies to this proposal. It will go through long hearings, there will be careful screening, and an executive session will be held. The committee will act. Then the House will act, and then the other body in committee and on the floor will act. Out of it will come something that will represent progress. It will probably go further than some people want and not as far as others want.

I agree with my friend in the broad statement he has made that "no one has the answer," but there is a problem. The purpose of my observations was this. I have talked with Mr. Kingsley only over the telephone on matters other than this. My talks with him have been very pleasant. I hope to meet him sometime. As I recollect, I have never met him personally. But no matter what Mr. Kingsley might have said in the past, the important thing, after all, is whether or not there are conditions in America requiring something to be done. That is the important thing, after all.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CUNNINGHAM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article on the preservation of national wildlife.

SOCIALIZED MEDICINE

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that upon the conclusion of the address by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] I may address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I could not permit the RECORD to remain as it would appear at the conclusion of the statements of my friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK]. He made the usual statement, which we have heard time and time again and endeavors to make it appear that anybody who speaks in opposition falls in the category of obstructing the progress of things in America. I have just simply this to say: I do not believe the gentleman from Massachusetts believes in the socialization of medicine, and when I say socialization of medicine, he knows what I am talking about. I do not believe the gentleman from Massachusetts believes in the nationalization of the hospitals in this country, either, and when I say nationalization of hospitals, I am sure he knows what I am talking about.

I cannot conceive that the gentleman from Massachusetts would ever support the thesis that the Federal Government should take over all the hospitals of this country and operate them. I do not believe the gentleman believes in any such thing. Yet, I want to say to the gentleman that this thing which he terms progress can merely be the entering wedge and the opening of the door to carry out the philosophy which seems to be well rounded and well fixed and which may result in the complete nationalization of all the hospital services in America and the complete socialization of medicine. I think the gentleman will be very interested to learn of the political theories of Mr. J. Donald Kingsley, as he has written them in his own books and in his own public statements. While he may be a great conciliator now in appearing before congressional committees, in an attempt to slide through this national life-insurance program, on the theory that it is not socialization of medicine, in accordance with his own statements, as I will quote them to you, it is just one part of the broad program to ultimately socialize medicine and socialize and nationalize the hospital facilities of America. I am calling attention to this because I think it is important.

Mr. Speaker, does that mean I am not conscious of this problem which confronts us? I have supported, as the gentleman well knows, every effort under the sun to enlarge the teaching staffs of our universities to provide more doctors and to set up nurse-training programs and provide the money to train nurses that will be needed to implement any sort of national health program. I have been a vigorous supporter of the Hill-Burton hospital-construction program, which will provide the hospital facilities which are necessary and without which no health program could possibly succeed. We have implemented the work of the State public-health services and the research facilities of the Nation during the 10 years that I have been a member of that Subcommittee on Appropriations, to the point where it has attracted the attention of the Nation.

The gentleman cannot talk to me and leave the impression in the RECORD of the Congress that I am in opposition to well-directed efforts to improve the health of the Nation or to provide facilities which will give health to the people of this country. I take this time merely to indicate as emphatically as I know how in the RECORD of the Congress that the implications contained in the rather rambling and generalized statements of the gentleman from Massachusetts cannot be construed to indicate that what the gentleman from Wisconsin has said or will say is in opposition to the efforts to provide the people of this country with facilities which I know they need in order that they may enjoy health.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONRONEY). The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] has expired.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

Mr. WORLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture may have until midnight tonight to file a report on the bill H. R. 3699.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

(Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

SOCIALISTIC TRENDS

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, no doubt every Member of the House, as well as the overwhelming majority of our citizens, agree with the basic thought expressed by both the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK]. The gentleman from Massachusetts sincerely bemoaned the situation which made it impossible for certain low-income groups, as he calls them, to obtain what he thought was necessary medical aid. He expressed some pride in the fact that he had assisted in the enactment of social-security legislation.

Social security, properly administered and limited, is all right, may I say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, but I go back to the day when some of the so-called reactionaries and conservatives believed in legislation and in a government which would enable and permit the individual to provide for his own old-age security. That day has gone, and I can see the necessity for social security, so-called, may I say to the gentleman; but only because his party has created a condition where it is absolutely impossible today for any man, unless he inherits wealth or has it, to provide for his old-age security. In my boyhood days a man who had two hands and the disposition to work could find a job, and conditions were such that he could provide for his own old-age security and start his children on the road to security.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. In just a minute.

If there are low-income groups today one of the reasons why, basic reasons, why the worker has less, why the businessman has less, why Government help is needed so often, is because the Government here in Washington as well as in some States takes away from him through taxation so much of what he earns. Sure. If I cause an automobile wreck the least I can do is go back and help the fellow I have injured, whose automobile I have destroyed; and the least the Democratc-New Deal Party ought to do is to now provide in some way, if it can, for the security of those who because of its legislation and its policies are unable to provide for themselves.

Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Did I understand my friend to say he now favors social security? Never mind the reasons for it.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. That I what?

Mr. MCCORMACK. That the gentleman now favors social security.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Favor it?

Mr. MCCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I am in favor of those whom your party has rendered incapable of taking care of themselves getting some help.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Never mind the reason. Now has the gentleman announced himself in favor of that?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Social security?

Mr. MCCORMACK. Social security.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I answered the gentleman: For those that you or rather your party through its policies put on relief rolls, I say "Yes."

Mr. MCCORMACK. Then the gentleman's answer is "Yes"?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I do not believe in socialized medicine—compulsory health insurance; no, I do not.

Mr. MCCORMACK. The gentleman is commencing to show a little liberality of spirit.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I am willing to do my part, and my people are prepared to do their part, to take care of those pauperized—through New Deal policies—waste and extravagance.

Mr. McCORMACK. The Hoover depression, of course, had nothing to do with bringing about that lack of economic stability.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Hoover depression. You mean the depression caused by World War I? But what did the gentleman's party do with Hoover's reorganization plans? What did your party do to preserve the rights of the House to assert its views in the matter?

Mr. McCORMACK. Why, we saved the country.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Saved the country—with a two-hundred-fifty billion debt—with the bond sale last week to get money for current expenses.

Now the gentleman comes along and drags in Mr. Hoover. The body across the Capitol has considered the reorganization plan, but we have no reorganization bill today because the House insists that the other body take the gentleman's plan, because the plan that they have over there, which would give us real organization, is not just suitable to the gentleman. Oh, no; the gentleman will not take that; the gentleman will not stand for a position that reserves to this House its constitutional right to pass upon any plan that the gentleman in the White House wants to send down. Why not?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Now the gentleman has jumped from social security to reorganization. We finally got the gentleman to make the first public admission of liberality, but he made it during this little colloquy here.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Not so little; quite a lot; and only the professional liberals believe in the wasteful spending of other people's money.

Mr. McCORMACK. We have finally got the gentleman to make an open confession, and it is most refreshing. But now the gentleman jumps from social security to reorganization. That is a pretty rapid shift; I do not quite follow the gentleman.

Now the gentleman said that in the reorganization bill conference we opposed everything——

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. What is that?

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is a member of the conference committee, is he not?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I am not talking about that; I would not venture to disclose anything that transpired in the conference.

Mr. McCORMACK. I wanted to protect the gentleman in that respect.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I do not need any protection from that side. I have learned how to stand on my own feet pretty well and take care of myself; I get along all right.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for one additional minute.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. So that I may yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may proceed for five additional minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. So that I may yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. McCORMACK. No; I do not want any more of the gentleman's time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts that the gentleman from Michigan may proceed for five additional minutes?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for five additional minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. I was interested in what the gentleman from Massachusetts had to say about social security. I would like for him to state who in the United States is secure in his financial position right now?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts for that purpose, although he will have 5 minutes of his own time.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman admits that he feels secure, does he not?

Mr. CURTIS. Oh, no.

Mr. McCORMACK. That makes you and myself.

But the gentleman is not secure? What about the fellow who is getting $25 a week? Is he as well off as the gentleman is?

Mr. CURTIS. The gentleman is evading my question.

Mr. McCORMACK. What about the corporations that made $20,000,000,000 and more last year?

Mr. CURTIS. I want to know who in this country you have made secure?

Mr. McCORMACK. Who we have made secure?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Why, the gentleman's question is so based upon—I do not want to use the word "ignorance"——

Mr. CURTIS. Go ahead, that will not bother me at all.

Mr. McCORMACK. On a total lack of economic knowledge during the last 20 years. Why, farmers were selling cotton down South for 4 or 5 cents a pound. What was wheat being sold for in 1930, 1931, and 1932? Were the Democrats in control then? No. The people of the gentleman's district were prostrated.

Mr. CURTIS. Why does not the gentleman answer the question?

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman has asked a question and I am answering it.

Give me time to answer it. We saved your people and the people of the gentleman's district in Michigan.

Mr. CURTIS. The gentleman better look to the coming depression and the rising unemployment now.

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, yes. You gentlemen have always opposed everything.

The gentleman always talks pessimism.

Mr. CURTIS. I want to become optimistic. Who have you made secure?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield further. I want to take up where the gentleman from Massachusetts, my good friend, Mr. McCORMACK, left off.

Mr. CURTIS. Will he answer the question?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The administration tells our people of this regulation and that order and what they mean, so that our folks at home do not know what to do. They, at least, do not feel secure. They get so many orders from Washington, so many contradictory orders, they do not know whether they are going north or south, east or west, backward or forward. They cannot do a thing the old way. Yet you talk about what the Democrats have done. You have raised the prices of all these things, but the difficulty is when you get the larger wage you boast about you will not have as much when you try to buy something as you had before. I could formerly live on $8 a week. I cannot do it now so well. My wife came along one night and she cut an apple in two. She gave me half of it. I asked her, "What is the matter?" She says, "Apples are 8 cents apiece. You are selling them at home for 35 cents a bushel." Yet when I get down to Washington and want one it costs 8 cents. And so it is all along the line. You want to buy something, but the money they give for your work will not do for you what it did in those so-called hard times. As Leo West—a CIO worker in my district, told me: "It is not a question of how much I get in that pay envelope; it is what my wife can get when she goes to the store with her basket." I said, "When did you discover that? My great-grandmother knew that away back in the days when they had to work for everything they got, when they spent their money wisely and well."

Now, I go back to my original thought, I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts. The gentleman's party has fixed it so it is absolutely impossible for the average man to provide for his old age, or to buy a home. That is why we have social security. That is why we have the housing problem. I started to build a home on $8 a week and finally got it paid for. I live in that same old shack. But you come along up there when we adjourn and you will see it is a fairly decent place, with a good bed to sleep in, plenty on the table to eat, with lakes and rivers nearby where you can catch fish and even shoot ducks once in a while—a typical American way of life, where anyone able and willing to work could, and the average did, provide for his old-age security.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONRONEY). The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a statement he made before the Committee on Education and Labor.

NATIONALIZATION OF HOSPITALS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, without realizing it, my good friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] made a very able speech in support of the great leadership of the Democratic Party during the last 16 years.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] spoke about nationalization of hospitals and socialization of medicine. Of course, nobody is advocating that, so far as I know. Those are coined phrases for the purpose of deceiving the people and creating an impression that something sinister, something inimical to the best interests of the people is involved in the recommendations made by President Truman. The same thing was said in 1934 and 1935, when President Roosevelt sent up his recommendations on social security.

No man ought to be a Member of the House if he is very sensitive, or he will lead a life of misery, and particularly as majority leader—if I were sensitive, I would live a very uncomfortable life—but I am not responsible for the sensitiveness of the feelings of my friend from Wisconsin if he construed what I said in his application to him as labeling him or trying to create the impression that he was "a destructionist to progress." If the gentleman has any such feeling, I want the record to show that I have no such thought in mind, because I can very well remember the fine fight made by the gentleman in the last Congress, when he was chairman of the subcommittee, in getting appropriations through in connection with laboratory research work regarding certain diseases and other matters, and I remember the cooperation and the unanimity with which it came out of the subcommittee of which he is a member this year. I want the record to show that if the gentleman assumes that anything I said might create that impression, that there was no such intent on my part.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. Does the mind of the gentleman go back to the time when the gentleman from Wisconsin brought to the floor of this House the original concept, and offered the first appropriation implementing it, of the maternity and infant-care program which was denounced by many people as being a Socialist measure, and that the gentleman from Wisconsin developed that program?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes. And the gentleman from Massachusetts was right in here helping him.

Mr. KEEFE. And the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations stopped it at the first opportunity by raising a point of order against it. But when the people were heard from around the country, and finally we got it through, the gentleman from Massachusetts and every Member of the Congress got behind that program, although some people said that program was a Socialist program. Now, I want the gentleman to understand that I do not stand in the way of progress in bringing aid to the unfortunate, and I recognize the problem that exists and am trying as desperately as the gentleman from Massachusetts to find the answer to it. But I do not think you have the answer in the proposal which you have before you, and I think the gentleman will admit that.

Mr. McCORMACK. When the gentleman takes the floor and says, "I do not think the gentleman from Massachusetts stands for the nationalization of hospitals and the socialization of medicine," I could well say that my friend from Wisconsin is guilty of the very thing that his conscience thought I was guilty of when, as a matter of fact, I was rather complimentary to my friend in trying to make a suggestion of guidance, rather presumptuous on my part, I realize. But I assumed that my friend from Wisconsin would not misconstrue it, and that in addition to what he might have to say about Mr. Kingsley—that is his name, is it not?

Mr. KEEFE. That is right.

Mr. McCORMACK. That he also discuss the situation confronting the people of America, that something must be done regarding the health problems. I agree with the gentleman, I do not think anyone has the answer, just the same as we did not have the answer in 1935 on social security when we started, just the same as we have not got the answer on social security today—in 1949. Times change. They produce new conditions. They create new problems. Government is a living institution. It never dies; it cannot. If it becomes static it commences to decay and disintegrate. Time passes, and problems constantly arise that concern the people and require legislative consideration, either on the part of Congress or on the part of the various State legislatures, so that there is no such thing as an end. Government must work, and in order to work it must serve. Whatever proposal is advanced it must be discussed on its merits. As to those who oppose it, I respect their views, but when they say that those who favor something being done stand for the nationalization of hospitals and the socialization of medicine, I sharply disagree with them and say that they are not intellectually honest. Whenever they present their views as to why they oppose, I thoroughly respect their views. But when they try to impugn the motives of those who honestly are endeavoring to seek a solution, by calling them harsh names, there is no contribution being made to any debate that will bring about a healthy and a constructive solution.

So I hope that when the gentleman addresses the House he will also address it from the angle of the economic necessity confronting our country and the need for some kind of legislation, in view of the fact that 50 percent of the families of America have a total income of $3,000 a year or less.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee, for the week of May 30, on account of official business.

SENATE

TUESDAY, MAY 31, 1949

(Legislative day of Monday, May 23, 1949)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, we turn from memorial wreaths, and from the fluttering flags on countless grassy mounds, to face once more the never-ending struggle to maintain and preserve the freedoms which have been bought at so crimson a cost. From sea to sea of the homeland this radiant morning, where the grass has been trodden by reverent feet, and in little sacred patches of alien soil, where is kept the bivouac of our valiant dead, we see the crosses and the flags blending in their mute testimony. Knowing that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, as we fight democracy's battles in these days against cunning foes at home and abroad, may that cross and that flag speak to us of strength that is increased by its spending, of life that is saved by its losing, and of greatness that is measured by its serving.

We ask it in the Redeemer's name. Amen.

CURTAILMENT OF VETERANS' ALMINISTRATION CONTACT SERVICE—LETTER AND RESOLUTION OF DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS, DEPARTMENT OF NORTH DAKOTA

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a letter from E. O. Podell, State adjutant, Disabled American Veterans, Department of North Dakota, transmitting a resolution adopted by that organization relating to the curtailment of the Veterans' Administration contact service, and I ask unanimous consent that they may be appropriately referred and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter and resolution were referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS,
DEPARTMENT OF NORTH DAKOTA,
Minot, N. Dak., May 27, 1949.

Hon. WILLIAM LANGER,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR LANGER: Enclosed you will please find copy of resolution referred to above, which was passed unanimously at the North Dakota Disabled American Veterans Convention, held in Devils Lake, N. Dak., May 7–9, 1949.

You are urged to strenuously support the wishes of all disabled veterans in our State, as expressed in this resolution.

Elimination or further curtailment of this vital function of service to all veterans is akin to removing the eyes and ears of the people's outpost, upon whom they depend for information as to the progress of the legislation they created for the specific purpose of aiding that segment of our citizenry they feel responsibility and gratitude toward.

E. O. PODELL,
State Adjutant.

Resolution 24

Whereas the recent drastic cut by the Federal Budget Bureau in the Veterans' Administration appropriation for the fiscal year of 1950 has resulted in a decision of Carl Gray, Jr., Administrator, to reduce Contact Division personnel, eliminating a number of contact field offices, and eliminating or at least severely curtailing itinerant contact service which provides direct service to the veteran and his dependents; and

Whereas further curtailment in the contact service of the Veterans' Administration in North Dakota is certain to effect a large number of disabled veterans and their dependents residing in smaller communities and rural areas and since they will not be able to contact the Veterans' Administration except by extensive travel and considerable cost; and

Whereas the Disabled American Veterans of the World Wars, Department of North Dakota, recognizes that benefits granted by Congress to the veteran and his dependents are not automatic and that the veteran and his dependents must be informed of their rights, benefits, and entitlements and assisted in the proper application to obtain them; and

Whereas a most important source of information and assistance to disabled veterans and their dependents has been through field contact offices and contact representatives or itinerant duty; and

Whereas we are of the opinion that the elimination or reduction of the service provided by the Contact Division of the Veterans' Administration will have the effect of withholding from the disabled veteran and his dependents the entitlements which have been granted by Congress. We feel that there are several divisions of the Veterans' Administration which could have been reduced in personnel with far less harmful effect to the veteran and we feel that the reduction in personnel of the Contact Division will result in the veteran and his dependents being unable to obtain entitlements to which they are entitled because of not being informed and being unable to properly present a claim; and

Whereas we feel that the burden of proof is frequently on the veteran by the elimination and reduction of the best source of information and assistance, thousands of prospective beneficiaries will have been disposed of—fewer applications for benefits, fewer claims open for review, fewer instances of required supplemental evidence: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Disabled American Veterans of the World Wars, Department of North Dakota, assembled in the twenty-ninth annual department convention at Devils Lake, N. Dak., May 7–9, protest emphatically against further reduction in the contact service of the Veterans' Administration in North Dakota; and be it

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Administrator of the Veterans' Administration, the manager of the Fargo center of the Veterans' Administration, and to each representative in Congress from North Dakota.

RICHARD V. BOULGER.

Passed at official convention, Department of North Dakota, Disabled American Veterans, Devils Lake, May 7–9.

State Adjutant.

PROPOSED REPEAL OF TAFT-HARTLEY LABOR LAW—PETITION

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have received this morning from the Wisconsin section of the American Society of Civil Engineers, a petition in opposition to certain changes being proposed in the Taft-Hartley law. The petition prays for maintenance of the separate professional status for professional employees. I believe in the soundness of this idea, and I support the position taken by the American Society of Civil Engineers.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the petition as conveyed to me by Mr. Willard W. Warzyn, chairman of the legislative committee, be appropriately referred and printed at this point in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WISCONSIN SECTION,
AMERICAN SOCIETY OF CIVIL ENGINEERS,
Milwaukee, Wis., May 27, 1949.

The Honorable ALEXANDER WILEY,
United States Senate Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WILEY: We, the undersigned represent the Wisconsin section of the American Society of Civil Engineers, which includes approximately 300 civil engineers in its membership, a list of which is enclosed.

We wish to protest against the bill introduced in the Senate and House pertaining to amendments of the Taft-Hartley Act which affect professional employees. Sections 2 (12) and 9 (b) 1 of the Taft-Hartley Act should be maintained in the act. These sections prohibit the inclusion of professional employees with nonprofessional employees in collective-bargaining units, unless a majority of such professional employees vote for inclusion in such unit.

An act of this nature which segregates the professional employees from the nonprofessional employees in their collective-bargaining units will serve the best interests of the public and the professional employees. Therefore, we sincerely hope that when any further consideration is given this labor legislation you will favor the maintenance of that portion of the act which prohibits the inclusion of professional employees with nonprofessional employees in collective-bargaining units.

Yours very truly,

Wisconsin Section, American Society of Civil Engineers: O. Neil Olson, President; Fred M. Sloane, First Vice President; LeRoy W. Empey, Second Vice President; Charles W. Yoder, Secretary and Treasurer; Willard W. Warzyn, Chairman, Legislative Committee; Legislative Committee Members: Robert C. Johnson, E. H. Schmidtman, Richard A. Smith, Grant M. Hinkamp, Louis J. Larson.

FLORIDA LEGISLATURE RESOLUTIONS

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference and printing in the RECORD Senate Memorial 282, relating to a limited world federal government, and Senate Memorial 614, relating to the recommendations of the Hoover Commission, both of the Florida Legislature, sent to me by the secretary of state of Florida, for presentation to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be received, appropriately referred, and, under the rule, printed in the RECORD.

To the Committee on the Judiciary:

"Senate Memorial 282

"Memorial to the Congress of the United States to convene a constitutional convention as provided by article V of the Constitution of the United States, for the purpose of determining the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States whereby the United States can participate in a limited world federal government to be created by amendment to the United Nations Charter, or by a world constitutional convention, with authority to enact, interpret, and enforce laws to prevent wars

"Whereas war is now a threat to the very existence of our civilization, because modern science has produced weapons of war which are overwhelmingly destructive and against which there is no sure defense; and

"Whereas the effective maintenance of world peace is the proper concern and responsibility of every American citizen; and

"Whereas the people of the State of Florida, while now enjoying domestic peace and security under the laws of their local, State, and Federal Government, deeply desire the guarantee of world peace; and

"Whereas all history shows that peace is the product of law and order, and that law and order are the product of government; and

"Whereas the United Nations, as presently constituted, although accomplishing great good in many fields, lacks authority to enact, interpret, or enforce world law, and under its present charter is incapable of restraining any major nations which may foster or foment war; and

"Whereas the Charter of the United Nations expressly provides in articles 108 and 109, a procedure for reviewing and altering the Charter; and

"Whereas the necessity for endowing the United Nations with limited powers rendering it capable of enacting, interpreting, or enforcing world law adequate to prevent war has been recognized by the Florida State Legislature through the passage of House Concurrent Resolution 10, 1945; and

"Whereas many other States have memorialized Congress through resolutions by their State legislatures or in referenda by their voters, to initiate steps toward the creation of a world federal government; and

"Whereas several nations have recently adopted constitutional provisions to facilitate their entry into a world federal government by authorizing a delegation to such a world federal government of a portion of their sovereignty sufficient to endow it with powers adequate to prevent war: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That application is hereby made to the Congress of the United States, pursuant to article V of the Constitution of the United States, to call a convention for the sole purpose of proposing amendment to the Constitution to enable the participation of the United States in a world federal government, open to all nations, with powers which, while defined and limited, shall be adequate to preserve peace, whether the proposed charter or constitution of such world federal government be presented in the form of amendments to the Charter of the United Nations, or by a world constitutional convention.

"Resolved, That the secretary of the State of Florida is hereby directed to transmit copies of this application to the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Congress, to the Members of the said Senate and the House of Representatives from this State, and to the presiding officers of each of the legislatures in the several States, requesting their cooperation; be it further

"Resolved, That certified copies of the foregoing preamble and memorial be immediately forwarded by the secretary of state of the State of Florida, under the great seal, to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate of the United States, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States.

"Approved by the Governor May 16, 1949."

To the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments:

"Senate Memorial 614

"Memorial recommending to the Congress of the United States of America the carrying into effect of the administrative recommendations of the Hoover Commission

"To the Honorable Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled:

"We, your memorialists, the legislative assembly of the State of Florida convened in regular session, respectfully represent that—

"Whereas during the last generation the enormous expenses of Federal governmental activities has created a condition of confusion and overlapping in the divisions of the administrative authority which has placed upon the President of these United States an ever-increasing burden and has resulted in increased costs and inefficient administration; and

"Whereas pursuant to Public Law 162, enacted by the Eightieth Congress, there was created a commission known as the Hoover Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, which Public Law was on July 7, 1947, approved by the President of the United States, Harry S. Truman; and

"Whereas pursuant to said Public Law 162, there was appointed a bipartisan group of representative and distinguished citizens of our country who had had experience in governmental affairs, which group made an exhaustive and unbiased examination into the administration of the agencies of the Federal Government; and

"Whereas the said commission has filed a detailed report of its findings and its conclusions therefrom together with its recommendations covering the matter; and

"Whereas it appears to your memorialists that the said findings, conclusions, and recommendations constitute a cohesive and efficient program which will be of great benefit to the peoples of these United States: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the State of Florida (the house of representatives concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States be and it hereby is petitioned and requested by your memorialists to give due and favorable consideration to the recommendations of the Hoover Commission to the end that the said recommendations may be adopted by the Congress of these United States and the President of the United States be directed thereby to effectuate the provisions of such recommendations; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Florida be, and he hereby is directed to transmit copies of this memorial to the President and clerk of the United States Senate, to the Speaker and Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each member of the Florida delegation in the Congress of the United States."

GAS AND OIL RESERVES—RESOLUTION OF INTERSTATE OIL COMPACT COMMISSION, JACKSONVILLE, FLA.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference a resolution adopted by the Interstate Oil Compact Commission, in meeting assembled at Jacksonville, Fla., May 11, 1949, pertaining to the subject of gas and oil reserves, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas there is pending in the Congress of the United States H. R. 79 and H. R. 1758 and S. 1498 for the purpose of amending the Natural Gas Act of 1938 to clarify the confusion existing in the Federal Power Commission, the State oil and gas regulatory bodies and the oil and gas industry with respect to the jurisdiction of the Federal Power Commission over the production, gathering, and field sales of gas, and after due consideration the Interstate Oil Compact Commission finds that—

1. It is the objective of each of said measures to make definite and certain that the the jurisdiction of the Federal Power Commission does not extend to the production and gathering of natural gas or the facilities used in connection therewith or the sales of natural gas by a producer or gatherer at arm's length to "a natural gas company."

2. In August 1947 the Federal Power Commission issued its order No. 139 disclaiming regulatory jurisdiction over production and gathering of natural gas or the facilities used in connection therewith or the sales made by a producer or gatherer at arm's length to "a natural gas company."

3. The State oil and gas regulatory bodies having jurisdiction over production and gathering of oil and gas and the enforcement of the oil and gas conservation laws in their respective States and the oil and gas industry have relied upon order No. 139.

4. It has come to the attention of the Interstate Oil Compact Commission that it is now the firm opinion of a majority of the members of the Federal Power Commission that order No. 139 was issued on a wrong legal premise and is, therefore, void and of no force or effect; but on the contrary, it has regulatory authority to control and fix the price of natural gas sold at arm's length by producers and gatherers to "a natural gas company" which is thereafter moved in interstate commerce.

5. The exercise of such jurisdiction by the Federal Power Commission would supersede and destroy the jurisdiction of the State regulatory bodies.

6. The Interstate Oil Compact Commission deems the exercise of such jurisdiction an invasion of the exclusive and retained right of the States to enact and enforce local regulatory laws with regard to purely intrastate operations.

7. The continued vigorous and effective enforcement of the State oil and gas conservation laws is necessary to the end that in the public interest the irreplaceable natural resources of oil and gas may be produced in such manner as to obtain the greatest ultimate recovery.

8. The regulation of oil and gas producers by the Federal Power Commission on a utility basis would make it impossible for the oil and gas industry to obtain the necessary venture capital to continue its search for new reserves.

9. Any cessation of the continued vigorous exploration for new oil and gas reserves would adversely affect the public interest by reducing the supply of natural gas and petroleum products available for public consumption and increase the price of natural gas and petroleum products to consumers.

10. The competitive price of natural gas in the field is controlled by the factors of supply and demand and has always been such as to produce a plentiful supply of natural gas for public consumption at prices less than the competitive prices of any other fuel.

11. The present known reserves of natural gas are sufficient to supply the public demand for any foreseeable period as the result of the wise enactment and effective enforcement of the State regulatory laws.

12. At the time of the enactment of the Natural Gas Act of 1938 it was the declared legislative intent that the jurisidiction of the Federal Power Commission was limited to the transportation of natural gas in interstate commerce and the subsequent sale thereof for resale for ultimate public consumption and that it did not extend to the production and gathering of natural gas or the facilities used in connection therewith or the arm's length sales thereof by local producers or gatherers. Any extension of the jurisdiction of the Commission in these respects will be contrary to the clear intent of Congress as expressed when the Natural Gas Act of 1938 was enacted: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Interstate Oil Compact Commission, in meeting assembled at Jacksonville, Fla., on the 11th day of May 1949, request the Congress of the United States to enact legislation carrying out the purpose of H. R. 79, H. R. 1758, and S. 1498, in order that it may be made certain that the jurisdiction of the Federal Power Commission does not extend to or include the production and gathering of natural gas or the facilities used in connection therewith or the arm's length sales of gas made by a producer and gatherer to a natural gas company. Enactment of such legislation is in the public interest. The failure to enact such legislation will adversely affect the public interest in the consuming States as well as the oil and gas producing States; be it further

Resolved, That the chairman of the Interstate Oil Compact Commission is directed to cause a copy of this resolution to be presented to the appropriate legislative committees of the United States Congress.

TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH SERVICE AND CLERK HIRE FOR MEMBERS OF HOUSE

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, I report favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 4583) relating to telephone and telegraph service and clerk hire for Members of the House of Representatives, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. The amendments were suggested by Members of the House of Representatives.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BESSIE MAE HILL

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, I report an original resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution was read as follows:

Hill, late an employee of the Senate, a sum equal to 6 months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 122) was considered and agreed to.

THE NATIONAL HEALTH PROGRAM

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] and myself I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to facilitate the broader distribution of health services, to increase the quantity and improve the quality of health services and facilities, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a résumé and explanation of the bill, together with a statement by Senator IVES and myself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the résumé and explanation and the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1970) to facilitate the broader distribution of health services, to increase the quantity and improve the quality of health services and facilities, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. FLANDERS (for himself and Mr. IVES), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The résumé and explanation and statement are as follows:

THE NATIONAL HEALTH ACT

RÉSUMÉ AND EXPLANATION

This national health bill has a threefold objective:

1. To make it possible, through voluntary prepayment plans, for everybody in the United States, of whatever income, to obtain adequate health care to the fullest extent that medical resources permit.

2. To see that the quantity of health service is expanded and its quality raised throughout the Nation by progressively eliminating shortages in our medical resources.

3. To do these things in such a way as to foster constructive freedom of action, and the responsibility that goes with it, on the part of both patients and doctors, individuals and associations, communities and States.

MAIN PROVISIONS

Basic in the bill's program will be voluntary prepayment plans. Their subscription charges would be scaled to their subscribers' incomes, rather than flat-rate premiums. Mixed Federal-State funds would make up any difference between the aggregate of subscribers' payments and the cost of furnishing health service benefits.

The bill would also provide: (a) Special Federal help in areas where the shortage of health resources is particularly acute, to attract personnel, and maintain modern facilities; (b) increased Federal aid to communities throughout the country for building hospitals and health centers; (c) Federal grants to medical and nursing schools; and (d) additional Federal aid to the States for expanding their local public health services.

Finally, the bill sets up machinery for constantly appraising the health needs of the Nation and for developing a national health program which would be periodically revised to keep pace with the growth in medical resources.

BASIC PRINCIPLES

This bill does not bring about socialized medicine; on the contrary, it very greatly encourages the development of private efforts, which actually pace the program.

It invokes no means test; on the contrary, it offers to everybody, poor or well-to-do, the right to obtain the same services as everyone else, at a cost scaled to his means.

The bill reflects the belief of its sponsors that great social needs can be met without falling into the errors of state socialism, and that needed services can be given at needed cost to our people without disrupting—but on the contrary, encouraging—the development of private initiative and enterprise.

The sponsors do not consider this bill necessarily the answer for all time to the health problem. For this reason they have provided the means for constant readjustment of the program on a rational basis. But they do consider the bill realistically designed to bring within everybody's reach all the care that the Nation's medical facilities can provide—and to assure the rapid development of enough facilities to include everybody, in every income group, who wants to use them. It thus places itself squarely in the American tradition of more and better services in response to voluntary demand.

HOW IT WORKS

The key to the program is the local, voluntary prepayment health service plan. Many such plans already exist—Blue Cross, Blue Shield, innumerable group health plans, industry plans, labor union plans, welfare funds, cooperatives, and so forth. Over 35,000,000 people are already enrolled in these plans.

The chief advantages of all such plans are: (1) that by spreading the risks among a large number of persons they enable their subscribers to protect themselves, at a moderate cost, against ruinous personal losses, and (2) being organized and operated privately, without governmental management, they can reflect accurately the desires and needs of their members. Their chief disadvantage is that the flat-rate premiums which most of the plans must now carry are beyond the means of millions of otherwise self-supporting people. This is especially the case when doctor's services in the home and office and preventive medical care, as well as hospital services, are included. Premiums for such coverage may run from $100 to $150 per family, far too much for incomes in the lower brackets. As a result, only a few of the voluntary plans at present cover more than hospitalization and surgical care, a fragment of the health services people need.

This legislation contemplates hundreds of such nonprofit voluntary plans, each locally organized and operated. It will use existing plans, enable them to expand, and open the way for new plans throughout the country.

Fundamental to the program is the requirement that these voluntary plans base the rate of payment by subscribers upon a percentage of the subscriber's income (up to $5,000). This provision will necessitate changing the method of charging practiced by most plans at present in existence. It is, however, essential for the purpose of opening voluntary plans to everyone by bringing in public aid for people of limited income without a means test.

In order to participate in the program, a State would set up a State health council. This council would divide the State into several regions, many of which have already been set up under the Federal Hospital Construction Act. Each region would be managed by a health region authority, made up of local people. On this authority and on the State health council there would be no practicing doctors, dentists, or others who provide health services, since they represent groups with a direct financial interest in the public's contributions, but each authority and council would have medical and other advisory committees.

The bill sets up a national yardstick in the form of a comprehensive range of benefits, which it defines in detail and which includes the most vital health services. It further states that the subscription charge for this particular coverage cannot be less than 3 percent of the subscriber's income up to $5,000. The first duty of each health region authority is to estimate the normal cost in that region of supplying the national yardstick coverage.

Any plan operating in that region which provides the yardstick range of benefits will receive from the State (with Federal participation) the difference between its subscribers' payments and the estimated normal cost of the coverage.

A plan may offer a coverage less comprehensive than the national yardstick coverage, in which case it would charge proportionately less to its subscribers, and any public contribution would be based on a proportionately lower allowed cost. Or a plan may provide a still more comprehensive coverage, in which case it must charge proportionately more and would have a proportionately higher allowed cost.

The maximum coverage a plan may offer under the bill's program will be fixed by the State health council. This maximum will be based on how much medical service can be provided in each of the State's regions by existing or reasonably obtainable personnel and facilities. The State may amend the maximum each year in the light of experience and in line with the growth of its medical resources.

HOW IT APPLIES

Let us suppose that a plan provides the yardstick coverage, for which it charges 3 percent of each subscriber's income. This would cover the subscriber and any dependents.

A subscriber with an income of $1,500 would pay $3.75 a month; one with $2,500 would pay $6.25 a month; and one with $3,800 would pay $9.50 a month. They would all get the same services, the deficit created by the lower incomes being made up by the State-Federal aid. Thus, if the annual cost allowed to the plan by the regional authority were $114 per family (which would be about the estimated average for the Nation), and if the average family in the plan paid $75 a year, then the State-Federal aid would contribute $38 per family to cover the deficit to that plan.

On the basis of these figures it is apparent that a $3,800 family would be paying its full cost. Smaller incomes would be subsidized, partly by the higher-income people who join the plan and partly out of public funds. Partial subsidization of the low-income groups by the higher ones is what happens now, in a rough and unsatisfactory way, through the scaling of charges by the doctors and the hospitals.

The minimum that anyone can pay to participate in a plan is $6 a year. In the case of unemployed persons or public wards this may be paid by the State, for whatever plan the individual chooses. On the other hand, the highest income used for figuring subscription rates is $5,000. Persons with larger incomes may join the plans, and will undoubtedly choose to do so; but many plans will probably provide that such people would be paid fixed sums (called "indemnity benefits") rather than being covered for the complete cost of their care (called "service benefits").

FREEDOM IS PRESERVED

Whether a family decides to come into the most complete plan set up under the State's program in its community, or into a cheaper and less complete plan, or stay out of all of them, is left to its own free choice. Whether a subscriber's employer pays all or part or none of the subscription charge, is for the employer and employee to work out together. Whether a subscriber's contribution is deducted from his pay is also subject to free arrangement. In the case of State and Federal employees, the bill provides that this may be done.

Like their patients, the Nation's doctors are free to come into any plan that will accept them, or to stay out of all of them. No more than at present will they be forced to accept any patients. Their inducement to it lies in the fact that the services that they now supply free to those who cannot pay their own way, will be fully paid for by the plans, whose members may be these same persons hitherto dependent on medical charity. They will be free to join any sort of plan, including group-practice plans, which will be fostered by the bill. Doctors may take part in the formation of a plan but may not control it.

Hospitals likewise may contract to supply their services to any plan that needs them, or they may stay out. The same inducements apply to them as to the doctors. In supporting the Blue Cross, the country's hospitals have already demonstrated their willingness to take part in prepayment plans.

The advantages of the program will be inducement enough, and no individual or group, consumer, doctor, or hospital, will be compelled to join. The powers and duties of government, local, State, and Federal, will be held to the minimum. At every level there will be ample freedom for that creative initiative which alone can translate our American aspirations into reality.

FEDERAL AID

The basic formula for Federal aid under this bill follows the lines of the Hospital Construction Act. Federal aid will be granted a State in inverse proportion to its per capita income. States having the lowest per capital income will receive Federal aid at a ratio of three Federal dollars for every State dollar devoted to the program; those with the highest per capita income will get one Federal dollar for two State dollars. The average for the Nation will be a little more than 50 percent Federal aid. The ceiling for Federal aid to any given State will be $15 a year for each person covered.

A State will begin to receive its Federal contribution as soon as it has passed the appropriate legislation and as soon as the machinery is in operation.

In the sometimes difficult matter of raising money to start a qualified nonprofit plan, the Federal Government will also help the States to help the organizers. Whatever amount the sponsors of a plan can raise, either by free contribution or in the form of non-interest-bearing loans, will be matched by mixed Federal and State money as interest-free loans.

A separate bill is being filed by the sponsors of this legislation which would make subscription charges deductible from taxable income.

The bill further provides for a revolving construction-loan fund of $10,000,000 of Federal money. Without requiring any State participation, this sum will be loaned to cooperating prepayment plans for the special purpose of building and equipping small local medical centers for the group practice of medicine. This sum would provide for the setting up of about 125 new health centers at one time, with no burden on the States.

By these means the establishment of a widespread, diverse system of voluntary plans will be fostered, including those that use group practice. In the long run those plans which supply the best and most extensive medical care for the subscribers, and at the same time obtain the most effective cooperation of the medical professions and the hospitals, will most rapidly spread their influence and increase the number of their subscribers. The mainspring of the program will be competition between the plans in the quality and extent of their services, with free opportunity and incentive to develop evermore effective means of distributing high-quality medical care.

EXPANSION OF MEDICAL RESOURCES

The accelerated development of prepayment plans, and the increased effective demand for medical services which would result from the enactment of this bill, must be matched by a steadily increasing number of well-trained doctors and nurses. The bill therefore provides special help for medical and nursing education, the cost to the Federal Government ranging from about $25,000,000 in the first year to about $40,000,000 in 1953. Federal aid is provided also for the construction and equipping of additional or new medical-school facilities, the Federal funds to match money from other sources.

The development of prepayment plans also makes it necessary to accelerate new construction of diagnostic and personal health service centers as well as hospitals. For this reason the bill offers amendments to the Hospital Construction Act, adding $100,000,000 a year to the present appropriation of $75,000,000 to be mixed State by State with funds from any other source according to the formula already described. Diagnostic and health service centers may share in this Federal aid.

The improvement of personal medical care throughout the country does not diminish the need for improved local public health services. This bill therefore provides for the extension of the established program of Federal aid to the States and local communities for the employment of public health officers and other personnel, and for the extension of basic community health services throughout the Nation. This is universally recognized as an integral part of a sound national health program.

Finally, the bill provides Federal aid (in the same proportion to State aid as in the case of prepayment plans) for programs in areas of special need. Such an area is defined as one in which there are no more than 8 doctors per 10,000 of population. Here it is proposed, with mixed Federal and State funds, to provide immediately the financial incentives and guaranties required to attract to these areas doctors, dentists, and nurses, and to provide the traveling clinics they so sorely need. Such funds will also be used to cover the initial deficits of hospitals, health centers, and diagnostic centers set up in these areas with the help of grants provided for under the Hospital Construction Act, as amended by this bill. This special program is of a largely temporary nature to fill the gap existing before the voluntary prepayment plans can develop so as to take up the burden. At a later stage Federal and State aid will flow into these areas through the normal channels described above.

STUDY AND PLANNING COMMISSION

The sponsors of this bill believe that the program of action described in the preceding paragraphs represents the most that the Federal Government should now undertake in new forms of assistance in the field of health. There remains, however, much more to be done. For the purpose of determining precisely what the Nation's health needs are, and how best to mobilize our resources to meet them, the bill sets in motion immediately a grass-roots inventory of health conditions, health resources, and all aspects of medical research, recruitment, and training of health personnel. For this purpose it establishes a bipartisan commission to be appointed jointly by Congress and the President, to direct, supervise, and coordinate a continuing study conducted locally.

This Commission is to report to Congress within 2 years on their findings with respect to the most pressing problems, such as the financial condition of the country's hospitals, the recruitment and training of health personnel, the provision of care for the chronic diseases (heart disease, cancer, multiple sclerosis, cerebral palsy, poliomyelitis and other crippling diseases of children, etc.), and the provision of dental care.

Within 4 years the Commission is instructed to report its findings and to formulate a 20-year national health program. In formulating this plan the Commission is to take into account the recommendations of the cooperating local and national organizations. Thereafter the Commission will report every 2 years, at each such interval pushing ahead the 20-year plan by 2 years.

The survey is to be financed by the Federal Government at an annual cost of $5,000,000.

COSTS AND GROWTH

In all its parts, this bill assigns the Federal Government the role of assisting local and State undertakings. The bill, in effect, says to the families of America and to their local and State governments, "The National Government offers to back up what you undertake. The scale of Federal aid depends on the scale of your enterprise." Thus, what these programs will mean in terms of Federal appropriations each year will be determined mainly by the scale of the voluntary response the Government's offer gets.

Assuming maximum voluntary response, the bill may be expected to call on Federal revenues for $300,000,000 the first year, and for a possible $850,000,000 4 years hence.

The largest potential expenditure is aid to the prepayment plans. By 1953, the Federal share in that program could reach $500,000,000 a year. This would represent a little more than half of needed public support for these plans. Subscriber's payments should provide between 60 and 85 percent of the plans' costs, depending on the income level of the particular community.

The Federal contribution to the "special need areas" can be expected to rise to a peak of conceivably $150,000,000 by 1952 and therafter level off at between $75,000,000 and $100,000,000 a year until prepayment plans blanket these areas.

The help offered to medical and nursing schools will probably range from $25,000,000 to $40,000,000 a year from fiscal 1949–50 to 1952–53, respectively. Construction grants to the schools over those 4 years may total $120,000,000, or $30,000,000 a year.

Hospital construction is not likely to take less that $175,000,000 a year proposed. This is $100,000,000 a year more than is provided by the existing law, under which a large backlog of much needed hospital facilities has built up.

The local public-health units program will probably rise to $30,000,000 by 1952–53 from $15,000,000 in 1949–50.

Comprehensive health study and planning will take $5,000,000 a year.

This added Federal expenditure will represent growth the length and breadth of this country in effective health services. It will also represent additional expenditures by States and local communities which have to spend their money in order to get the Federal money. Indeed, individuals have to decide to spend their money before the Federal or State governments become committed to provide any funds whatever.

BRIEF COMPARISON WITH HILL, TAFT, AND THOMAS BILLS (S. 1465, S. 1581, AND S. 1679)

In principle this approach to health insurance is similar to that of the Hill bill, but with several important differences. One is that the Hill bill in effect requires those who need help in paying for voluntary prepayment plans to pass an individual means test, while this bill gives everyone the automatic right to join a prepayment plan at a charge that he can afford. On this point, the Taft bill is less explicit but just as clearly contemplates the use of a means test.

Under the Hill bill public aid would go only to prepayment plans offering no more than in-hospital care and the out-patient services of hospitals and diagnostic centers. This bill leaves the scope of services for which public funds may be used solely to the discretion of the States and their health regions. From the beginning people in many communities will secure far broader benefits, such as home care and preventive services of doctors, where the community is equipped to supply them.

Both the Hill and Taft bills fail to provide for the free organization of prepayment plans within the States. At present in 22 States the organization of such plans is effectively restricted to medical societies. In contrast our bill provides positively for State enabling acts which would permit the free organization of prepayment plans.

The Taft bill concentrates all attention on those unable to pay the whole cost of care and requires the States to develop programs that would assure such persons all needed services within a period of 5 years. This requirement, we feel, is totally unrealistic in the light of the proposed maximum appropriation of $300,000,000, which, added to State funds, would provide no more than $600,000,000 a year of public funds for this purpose. In our judgment it would take five times as much money and more than 10 years' time to reach the Taft bill's goal.

On this score, the Thomas bill is equally unrealistic. Starting in July 1951, it would impose a pay-roll tax of 3 percent on the employed and an income tax of 2¼ percent on the self-employed, for which there would be given as broad a range of services as the Federal Government believed could be supplied in the various States. But while theoretically only services that could be provided would be promised, the payment of so substantial a tax would necessarily confer on the taxpayer a right to demand comprehensive care. This insistent demand would force a burden on hospitals, doctors, and auxiliary personnel that they could not possibly carry. The result would be grossly inadequate service and an irresistible demand for direct Federal control. In contrast, this bill links the extension of prepaid services with the local capacity to supply service. There is no element in this bill that will force or encourage public authorities or prepayment plans to issue contracts that cannot in fact be fulfilled.

The Hill, Taft, and Thomas bills all provide for surveys or studies of various elements of the health field. This bill seeks to unite all these partial studies and many others into a single coordinated whole, looking toward the formulation of a national long-range program. There have been too many fragmentary studies and plans. It is time for the health problem to be treated as a single problem, one of the biggest and most basic problems the Nation faces today.

The goal of this bill is the most efficient production and distribution of medical care for the benefit of all the American people. We propose means for moving immediately toward that part of the goal which is realizable with present resources and those that can be developed soon. The survey is intended to amend the means if necessary, to develop further means, to state the further goal of covering all the health needs of the American people, and to work out the means of achieving that ultimate goal.

OUTLINE OF NATIONAL HEALTH ACT, 1949

The proposed National Health Act, 1949, is developed within the framework of the Public Health Service Act (a) adding a new title VII—which provides an immediate health and medical service program, (b) adding a new title VIII—which provides for a long-range survey of national health needs, (c) amending existing provisions of title VI—relating to hospital construction, (d) adding a new provision to title III, regarding local public-health units.

A. The core of the title VII immediate program is part C, providing assistance to voluntary, nonprofit, prepayment health-service plans. These are the salient features:

1. Individuals will obtain medical care for themselves and their families by belonging to and obtaining a kind of health insurance contract through cooperating prepayment health service plans (which are to be nonprofit organizations like the Blue Cross). (721 (b).)

2. These plans must base their subscription charges upon a percentage of the subscriber's net income up to $5,000. The minimum subscription charge is $6 per year. (723 (n).) The health region authority—a public body appointed by the Governor—determines to what extent the plans must accept nongroup applicants. Within those limits individual applications must be accepted on a first-come, first-served basis, except that no more than 25 percent of the beneficiaries may reside outside the State. (721 (c).)

3. The minimum subscription charges will depend upon the benefits provided by the plan. Section 723 (l) sets forth a yardstick of services and benefits, which include home care, diagnostic and preventive services, and hospital treatment. For this yardstick, the minimum charge is 3 percent of the subscriber's income. (723 (n).) If a plan offers greater, or less, benefits than the norm, the minimum subscription charge is adjusted accordingly. (723 (m), (n).) A plan may offer more than one contract.

4. However, it is for the State health council to determine, upon the basis of available personnel and facilities, the maximum range of services and benefits which may be offered by the plans under the program in that State. (723 (l).)

5. The health region authority will calculate an allowed cost, which is its estimate of the normal cost of furnishing the benefits under each approved contract. (723 (m).) The State program will assure each plan that it will recover this allowed cost, and in the event that subscription income is inadequate—whether due to the low income of the subscribers, or their greater health needs—the State will pay the difference. (723 (o).) An adjustment procedure is provided for plans with adverse selection factors—e. g. where a disproportionate number of the subscribers are aged. (723 (o).)

6. The States may make noninterest loans to assist in the initial establishment of the prepayment plans. (723 (y).)

7. The States may make special grants for special-need areas—defined in 721 (i) as regions with not more than 8 doctors per 10,000 population—in order to assure the personnel and facilities needed to furnish the services set forth in 723 (l). (724.)

8. As to all these sums paid by the State, the Federal Government will reimburse the State up to its Federal percentage of the sum paid. The Federal percentage increases as the State's per capita income decreases, but never falls below 33⅓ percent or exceeds 75 percent, subject to the qualification that, as to sums paid by the States to participating health-service plans to meet their costs, in no event can the Federal reimbursement to the State exceed $15 yearly per beneficiary covered by such plans. (725.)

B. Title VII, part D, appropriates $10,000,000, so that the Surgeon General may make 4-percent loans to prepayment health-service plans to cover up to 80 percent of the cost of personal health-service centers to provide health services to the subscribers and beneficiaries as ambulatory patients.

C. Title VII, part E: To alleviate the shortage of doctors and nurses the bill provides:

1. Payments to medical schools of $500 for each enrolled student, plus an additional $1,000 for each enrolled student in excess of average past enrollment. Comparable provisions are provided for nursing schools (sec. 743).

2. The Surgeon General may grant up to 50 percent of the costs of construction and equipment of new medical or nursing schools or expansions (sec. 744).

D. Title VIII: Establishes a bipartisan Federal Health Study and Planning Commission—four members appointed by the President; four by the President pro tempore of the Senate; four by the Speaker—in each case at least two from private life (sec. 802).

This Commission is to conduct continuing studies of health-service needs—obtaining data as to supply and education of qualified personnel; as to health care received within the various regions; as to status of research, health education, hospitals, and health centers, etc. The Commission is directed, so far as practicable, to avoid making its own studies but to develop the basic data through contracts with public bodies established by the States, and with public and private nonprofit organizations (sec. 805).

The Commission is directed to formulate a 20-year health plan to improve the Nation's health services. This plan is to be submitted to the President and the Congress by January 15, 1953, and is to be revised every 2 years. The Commission is also directed to make interim reports on certain urgent problems.

For these purposes, up to $5,000,000 per annum is authorized for appropriation.

E. Title VI of the Public Health Service Act: Hospital-construction program is amended in certain respects:

1. To permit State grants and Federal contributions for construction of diagnostic centers, and personal health-service centers, serving ambulatory patients—as well as hospitals and public-health centers (sec. 631).

2. Increases appropriation from $75,000,000 to $175,000,000 per annum, and increases Federal contribution to construction projects from a flat 33⅓ percent to the State's Federal percentage (which varies from 33⅓ percent to 75 percent) (secs. 621, 624, 625).

3. Provides $2,500,000 per annum for demonstrations to improve the efficiency and utilization of hospitals and health personnel.

F. Title III is added to by inserting section 315, relating to local public-health units. If a State provides a plan for extending the coverage and services of local public-health units, it is entitled to receive a percentage of the cost of the plan, the percentage varying inversely with the State's per capita income but not exceeding 66⅔ percent.

STATEMENT OF SENATOR FLANDERS AND SENATOR IVES

We are sponsoring this National Health Act because we feel it is a broad comprehensive program designed to meet the health needs of our Nation in a manner consistent with our traditions of freedom.

This bill is diametrically different from the compulsory health insurance bill offered by the administration. Unlike the plan of that measure, this program would be a voluntary one.

It would place and preserve primary responsibility for the development of adequate health services in the States and local communities where the needs are most accurately known and best can be met, rather than at the remote Federal level.

Utilizing existing private organizations and providing adequate incentives for additional facilities of this nature as they may be needed, our bill provides an over-all attack on the health problems of the Nation in terms of present services available and anticipates an increasing program as medical facilities are developed.

This pattern of medical service for our people is designed to give the maximum in assistance, without regard to an individual's income, and with the minimum of Government direction, control, and centralization. The financial relationship between the doctor and hospital and patient will be, not through Government as in the administration's proposal, but through local voluntary health plans.

In the light of prevailing economic conditions in our Nation and throughout the world, it may be found that the entire program presented in the bill, cannot, prudently, be adopted immediately. Should this be the case, we especially urge the passage of those portions of the bill which authorize an immediate survey of the Nation's health needs, to the end that steps may be taken to provide medical facilities more nearly adequate in all sections of the country. As economic conditions warrant, the program should be stepped up proportionately.

EXTENSION OF GI READJUSTMENT ALLOWANCES

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to extend the readjustment allowance provision of the GI bill of rights for an additional 2 years beyond the July 25, 1949 deadline, and

I ask unanimous consent that the text of a statement which I have prepared on the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement presented by the Senator from Wisconsin will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1972) to amend the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944 to extend the period during which readjustment allowances may be paid, introduced by Mr. WILEY, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The statement presented by Mr. WILEY is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR WILEY ON INTRODUCTION OF BILL TO EXTEND GI READJUSTMENT ALLOWANCES FOR 2 YEARS

AN ANSWER TO SMEAR CHARGES AGAINST VETERANS

I am introducing today in the Senate a bill for amendment of the provisions of the GI bill of rights. My bill simply amends the present law by extending title VII's deadline from July 25, 1949, to July 25, 1951. The reason for the extension is obvious. When the Congress enacted the GI bill of rights it inserted the present deadline of allowances (for unemployed and self-employed veterans) on the assumption that the 4 years immediately following the end of hostilities would involve the most serious readjustment problems for our ex-servicemen—problems both economic and psychological.

GREATEST NEED HAS ONLY JUST BEGUN

Those 4 years are passed, but the greatest unemployment crisis has only just begun. To allow the readjustment allowance provision to lapse after July 25, 1949, would be a sham and a farce. Our veterans who are having difficulty in finding jobs now and in keeping their little businesses going would feel betrayed. These allowances must therefore be continued for unemployed veterans and self-employed veterans (earning less than $100 a month). Only a tiny percentage of our veterans has thus far benefited from this provision of the GI law.

WE ARE HOPING ALLOWANCES WILL NOT BE USED

Now, I want it understood that those Members of Congress such as myself who want this title 7 extended are hoping, praying, that it will not, in fact, be utilized to an appreciable extent. We certainly do not want conditions to be such that our veterans will find it necessary to receive Government aid for 52 weeks. We hope that there will be sufficient jobs and sufficient prosperity in self-employed veterans' businesses so that these allowances will not be necessary. However, it is only fair that we take precautions so that, if perhaps, sufficient jobs are not available, our veterans will not be left out in the cold. That does not, of course, mean that we in the Congress are simply going to forget the job matter. On the contrary, we will be working harder than ever before in order to make sure that the Nation's employment and prosperity remains at the highest possible level.

Only a tiny percentage of our ex-servicemen has abused any of the provisions of the GI bill of rights at all. The number of veterans who have misused the readjustment allowance privilege is so small in relation to the total number of ex-servicemen as to be completely insignificant.

SLURS, INSULTS, AND SMEARS OF VETS

But to hear some people talk, one would think that all our 18,000,000 veterans were "loafers" and "leaners" who simply want to receive Government checks. Such talk is an insult, a slur and a miserable smear on the good name of America's veterans—who ask no more than a fair break.

SUPPORT OF EXTENSION IDEA

The American Legion executive committee has endorsed the 2-year extension of this provision, and its action is supported by indications which I have received from other veterans' organizations, from county veterans' service officers, from unions and other groups.

WE DON'T WANT INDEFINITE EXTENSION

The American Legion rightly indicated, and I am glad to indicate, that it is not our intention to extend the readjustment allowance title indefinitely. An indefinite extension would be contrary to the whole principle of this provision. Allowances are designed for readjustment in the postwar period only, and not for perpetual maladjustment.

I hope that the loose talk about our veterans will be ended, because I feel that it is unfair to the men who have indicated by their deeds, not merely their words, that they are our finest citizens—the cream of our youth in every respect. I am hoping that the House Veterans' Affairs Committee, the companion Senate group, and both Chambers will act promptly on this extension legislation, so that there will be no lapse of the benefits.

Our veterans (who lost years from their normal lives and trades) are the first to suffer in a recession, the first to lose jobs because of their comparative lack of experience, the first to lose their businesses. We must afford them reasonable protection. We must not permit discrimination against veterans who will be losing jobs now and who will need the allowances now, and did not utilize the allowance feature before this, whereas some of their buddies did.

PROPOSED REPEAL OF TAFT-HARTLEY LABOR LAW—AMENDMENTS

Mr. THOMAS of Utah submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 249) to diminish the causes of labor disputes burdening or obstructing interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. LUCAS and Mr. DOWNEY each submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (H. R. 3436) to amend section 3 of the Lucas Act with respect to redefinition of request for relief, relating to war contractors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS AND RELATED NEUROLOGICAL DISEASES—AMENDMENT

Mr. TOBEY (for himself and Mr. O'MAHONEY) submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute, intended to be proposed by them, jointly, to the bill (S. 102) to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for research and investigation with respect to the cause, prevention, and treatment of multiple sclerosis and related neurological diseases, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and ordered to be printed.

ADMISSION OF DISPLACED PERSONS—LETTER FROM JOHN W. EDELMAN

[Mr. MYERS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed by John W. Edelman, Washington representative, Textile Workers Union of America, CIO, to the editor of the Washington Evening Star and published in that newspaper on May 23, 1949, under the caption "Textile union official pleads for admission of displaced persons," which appears in the Appendix.]

LEAVES OF ABSENCE

Mr. HENDRICKSON asked and obtained consent to be absent from the sessions of the Senate on June 1, 2, and 3.

On request of Mr. WHERRY, and by unanimous consent, Mr. BUTLER was excused from the sessions of the Senate today and June 1 and 2.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR COMPLETION OF ANNUAL ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1754) extending the time for the completion of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States for the year ending at 12 o'clock meridian July 1, 1949, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. LUCAS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. DOWNEY, Mr. MILLIKIN, and Mr. CORDON conferees on the part of the Senate.

ESTABLISHMENT OF ST. CROIX ISLAND NATIONAL MONUMENT, MAINE

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I should like to ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], as chairman of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, may be permitted to call up and have action on a House bill. Through inadvertence a Senate bill instead of a House bill was recently passed. It will require only about 30 seconds.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request? The Chair hears none.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, on the call of the calendar several weeks ago the Senate passed a bill which was introduced by the Senators from Maine to establish the St. Croix Island National Monument in the State of Maine. The fact was overlooked at that time that there was a House bill identical with the Senate bill which was before the Senate committee. The most expeditious way to make effective the action of the Senate and the House is to have the Senate now discharge the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs from the further consideration of House bill 1357 and to pass that bill in lieu of the Senate bill which has already gone to the House. So, Mr. President, I make that unanimous-consent request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs is discharged from the further consideration of House bill 1357.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 1357) to authorize the establishment of the St. Croix Island National Monument, in the State of Maine, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to further amend the Communications Act of 1934.

The bill is the end product of several years of work by myself and other members of the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Extensive hearings were held in 1943, 1945, and 1947 on many of the sections included in the bill introduced today. Other sections have been proposed by the Federal Communications Commission from time to time. Some sections were recommended by Senator TOBEY and me, as a subcommittee, in a report to the full committee. These recommendations were adopted unanimously by the full committee in Senate Report No. 49, and the recommended sections were included in a bill introduced by the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] a few weeks ago.

I desire to make it clear that my purpose in including all of the sections contained in the bill is to make sure that they will have the careful consideration of the committee, but all of them do not necessarily represent my personal views.

For example, section 5 of the bill provides, among other things, for the division of the Federal Communications Commission into panels. There exists a considerable difference of opinion regarding the worth of panels. I agree with others who have studied the problems of the Commission that a change in the internal structure is extremely desirable. Whether a panel structure will be helpful or will result in even greater confusion is a matter which our committee will consider carefully.

On the other hand, there appears to be almost unanimous agreement for the enactment of a provision which makes mandatory the horizontal reorganization of the Commission along lines of its principal work-load, provides for an independent legal-engineering-accounting review staff divorced from the Commission's prosecutory functions and generally gives the Commission some flexibility in meeting its case-load and rule-making problems. I have drafted such a provision after consultation with Commissioners and my personal opinion is that it must be a part of any bill enacted. Whether panels should be provided for in addition is a question I believe our committee can settle with little delay.

It should be noted that the bill I have introduced today is limited strictly to organizational, administrative, and appellate provisions. I have included no policy sections simply because the most urgent and pressing problem of the Commission today deals with its internal organization. If legislation on substantive matters of policy are found necessary, it is my belief that they must be given careful committee consideration, either in this bill or possibly in other legislation.

There can be little doubt, however, that administrative and procedural amendments to the existing communications law are badly needed. It is my hope that our committee can and will consider this bill rather promptly, even though some hearings may be necessary, in an effort to enact legislation in this session of Congress.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in full at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1973) to further amend the Communications Act of 1934, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as "Communications Act Amendments, 1949."

SEC. 2. Subsections (o) and (p) of section 3 of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, are amended to read as follows:

"(o) 'Broadcasting' means the dissemination of radio communications intended to be received directly by the public.

"(p) 'Network broadcasting' or 'chain broadcasting' means the simultaneous or delayed broadcasting on a single broadcast band of identical programs by two or more stations however connected."

SEC. 3. Section 3 of such act is further amended by adding after subsection (aa) the following:

"(bb) The term 'license,' 'station license,' or 'radio station license' means that instrument of authorization required by this act or the rules and regulations of the Commission made pursuant to this act, for the use or operation of apparatus for transmission of energy, or communications, or signals by radio, by whatever name the instrument may be designated by the Commission.

"(cc) The term 'broadcast station,' broadcasting station,' or 'radio broadcast station' means a radio station equipped to engage in broadcasting as herein defined.

"(dd) The term 'construction permit' or 'permit for construction' means that instrument of authorization required by this act or the rules and regulations of the Commission made pursuant to this act for the installation of apparatus for the transmission of energy, or communications, or signals by radio, by whatever name the instrument may be designated by the Commission.

"(ee) The term 'Commission' as used in this act shall be taken to mean the whole Commission or a panel thereof as required by the context and the subject matter dealt with."

SEC. 4. (a) Subsection (b) of section 4 of such act, as amended, is amended by striking out the last two sentences thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Such Commissioners shall not engage in any other business, vocation, profession, or employment but this shall not apply to the preparation of technical or professional publications. On and after one year from the date of enactment of this act such Commissioners shall not during the term for which they are appointed and qualified, irrespective of their term of actual service, engage in any business, vocation, profession, or employment the compensation for which is derived from or paid by any person, including all persons under common control, subject to the provisions of this act. Not more than four members of the Commission shall be members of the same political party and not more than two members of each panel thereof shall be members of the same political party."

(b) Subsection (d) of section 4 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"(d) Each Commissioner shall receive an annual salary of $15,000 payable in monthly installments."

(c) Subsection (f) (1) of section 4 of such act is amended to read as follows:

The chief engineer, the chief accountant, and the general counsel shall each receive an annual salary of not to exceed $12,000; the secretary shall receive an annual salary of not to exceed $10,000, and no assistant shall receive an annual salary in excess of $10,000: Provided, That the salaries specified in this subsection shall be maximum gross salaries not subject to increases heretofore or hereafter authorized by law, unless such increases shall specify the salaries in this subsection: And provided further, That on and after one year from the date of enactment of this act the secretary of the Commission, the chief engineer, the chief accountant, the general counsel, and the legal assistants to each Commissioner shall not, for the period of one year next following the cessation of their employment with the Commission, represent before the Commission in a professional capacity any person, including all persons under common control, subject to the provisions of this act. The Commission shall have authority, subject to the provisions of the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, to appoint such other officers, engineers, accountants, attorneys, inspectors, examiners, and other employees as are necessary in the execution of its functions."

(d) The first sentence of subsection (g) of section 4 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(g) The Commission may make such expenditures (including expenditures for rent and personal services at the seat of government and elsewhere, for office supplies, law books, periodicals, and books of reference, for printing and binding, for land for use as sites for radio monitoring stations and related facilities, including living quarters where necessary in remote areas, for the construction of such stations and facilities, and for the improvement, furnishing, equipping, and repairing of such stations and facilities and of laboratories and other related facilities (including construction of minor subsidiary buildings and structures not exceeding $25,000 in any one instance) used in connection with technical research activities), as may be necessary for the execution of the functions vested in the Commission and as from time to time may be appropriated for by Congress."

(e) Subsection (h) of section 4 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"(h) Four members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum thereof and two members of each panel shall constitute a quorum of such panel. The Commission shall have an official seal which shall be judicially noted."

(f) Subsection (k) of section 4 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"(k) The Commission shall make an annual report to Congress, copies of which shall be distributed as are other reports transmitted to Congress. Such reports shall contain—

"(1) such information and data collected by the Commission as may be considered of value in the determination of questions connected with the regulation of interstate and foreign wire and radio communication and radio transmission of energy;

"(2) such information and data concerning the functioning of the Commission as will be of value to Congress in appraising the amount and character of the work and accomplishments of the Commission and the adequacy of its staff and equipment: Provided, That the first and second annual reports following the date of enactment of Communications Act amendments, 1949, shall set forth in detail the number of pending cases of all types at the beginning and end of the period covered by such reports;

SEC. 5. Section 5 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"ORGANIZATION OF THE COMMISSION

"SEC. 5. (a) The member of the Commission designated by the President as chairman shall be the chief executive officer of the Commission. It shall be his duty to preside at all meetings and sessions of the whole Commission, to represent the Commission in all matters relating to legislation and legislative reports, to represent the Commission in all matters requiring conferences or communications with other governmental officers, departments, or agencies and generally to coordinate and organize the work of the Commission and each panel thereof in such manner as to promote prompt and efficient disposition of all matters within the jurisdiction of the Commission.

"(b) Within 60 days after the enactment of this act, the Commission shall organize its staff into three integrated divisions, each of which shall include legal, engineering, and accounting personnel, to function on the basis of the Commission's principal work-load operations: Provided, That the Commission may, in its discretion, exempt from such divisional organizations its laboratory, frequency allocation, treaty, field engineering, and monitoring activities and personnel assigned to same. Each such division shall handle and process, under the direction of the Commission, all applications, cases, and proceedings in its assigned field. The Commission may from time to time establish such other integrated functioning divisions as its operations and work load may, in its judgment, make necessary or desirable, or revise or modify the divisions herein provided for. The general counsel, the chief engineer, and the chief accountant, and their respective assistants shall carry out their respective duties under such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe. The Commission shall establish a staff, directly responsible to it, which shall include such legal, engineering, and accounting personnel as the Commission deems necessary, whose duty shall be to prepare such drafts of Commission decisions, orders, and other memoranda as the Commission, in the exercise of its quasi-judicial duties, may from time to time direct: Provided, That no member of such staff shall participate in a hearing or represent the Commission, directly or indirectly, in any prosecutory or investigatory function or proceeding.

"(c) Within 60 days after the enactment of this act and annually on June 30 thereafter, the Commission shall organize its members, other than the Chairman, into two panel of three members each, select a chairman for such panels, and said panels to be known and designated as the "broadcast panel" and the "communications panel." Except as hereinafter provided, no member designated to serve on one panel shall have or exercise any duty or authority with respect to the work or functions of the other but no member of the Commission shall be designated to serve upon a particular panel for more than 1 year in any consecutive 2-year period.

"(d) The broadcast panel shall have and exercise jurisdiction as provided in subsection (e) hereof over such questions of substance and procedure as may arise under this act or amendments thereto relating to wire and radio communications intended to be received by the public directly, or services exclusively related thereto of a non-common-carrier nature.

"(e) The communications panel shall have and exercise jurisdiction as provided in subsection (e) hereof over such questions of substance and procedure as may arise under this act or amendments thereto relating to wire and radio communications by a common-carrier or carriers or which are intended to be received by a designated addressee or addressees, including among others (1) all signals or communications of an emergency nature, including those by, to, and between ships at sea and those relating to fire control and police activities; (2) all signals and communications by, to, and between aircraft, or for the use or assistance of aircraft; (3) all signals and communications by, to, and between trains, motor vehicles and other manner of land transportation, including vessels engaged in inland waterways or harbor operations; and (4) all signals and communications by, to, and between amateur stations.

"(f) Within its respective jurisdiction, each panel shall, unless otherwise ordered by the whole Commission, (1) make all orders and adjudications involving the interpretation and application of the act or of the Commission's regulations made pursuant to the act, and (2) function as a committee of the whole Commission in the exercise of the Commission's rule-making powers.

"(g) The whole Commission shall have and exercise jurisdiction (1) over the establishment and maintenance of the panels provided for in subsection (b) hereof and of all questions which may arise concerning the jurisdiction of such panels; (2) over the adoption and promulgation of all rules and regulations of general application authorized by this act, including procedural rules and regulations for the Commission and the panels thereof; (3) over the assignment of bands of frequencies to the various radio services; (4) over the selection and appointment of all officers and other employees of the Commission and of the panels thereof; and (5) generally over all other matters with respect to which authority is not otherwise specifically conferred by other provisions of this act, including the assignment, in its discretion, over the qualification and licensing of all radio operators and over industrial heating, electromedical, and other electrical apparatus capable of causing harmful interference to other radio services to panels or designated personnel.

"(h) Each panel of the Commission shall, in conformity with and subject to the provisions of this section, organize the personnel assigned to it in such manner as will best serve the prompt and orderly conduct of its business. Each panel shall have power and authority by a majority thereto to hear and determine, order, certify, report, or otherwise act as to any of said work, business, or functions over which it has jurisdiction. Any decision, order, report made, or other action taken by either of said panels with respect to any matter within its jurisdiction shall be final and conclusive except as otherwise provided in this act. The secretary and seal of the Commission shall be the secretary and seal of each panel thereof.

"(i) Notwithstanding any other provisions of this section, the Commission may, when necessary to the proper functioning of the Commission and the prompt and orderly conduct of its business (1) order any matter otherwise within the jurisdiction of either panel to be considered and determined by the whole Commission; (2) order any matter otherwise within the jurisdiction of either panel to be considered and determined by the other panel; (3) continue any member in the performance of particular duties undertaken and commenced while serving as Chairman of the Commission or as a member of either panel; (4) assign any member including the Chairman to fill temporarily a vacancy or absence existing on either panel; and (5) assign any member to fill temporarily a vacancy or absence existing in the office of the Chairman of the Commission.

"(j) Special assignments either of members of the Commission or of particular items of business made pursuant to subsection (h) hereof shall not affect the regular organization of the Commission as provided herein and shall not affect the duties and responsibilities conferred upon any Commissioner by virtue thereof. During the temporary service of any Commissioner pursuant to any such assignment, such Commissioner shall continue to exercise the other duties and responsibilities which are conferred upon him by or pursuant to this act.

"(k) Except as provided in section 409 hereof, the Commission or either panel thereof is hereby authorized by its order to assign or refer any portion of its work, business, or functions to an individual Commissioner, or to a board composed of an employee or employees of the Commission, to be designated by such order for action thereon, and by its further order at any time to amend, modify, or rescind any such order or reference: Provided, That this authority shall not extend to duties otherwise specifically imposed by this or any other act of Congress. Any order, decision, or report made or other action taken by any such individual Commissioner or board in respect of any matter so assigned or referred shall have the same force and effect and may be made, evidenced, and enforced as if made by the Commission or the appropriate panel thereof: Provided, however, That any person aggrieved by any such order, decision, or report may file a petition for review by the Commission or the appropriate panel thereof and every such petition shall be passed upon by the Commission or that panel.

"(i) Meetings of the whole Commission shall be held at regular intervals, not less frequently than once each calendar month, at which times the assignment of cases to the Commission or to panels under subsection (b) shall be ordered; the functioning of the Commission and the particular panels shall be reviewed; and such orders shall be entered, and other action taken, as may be necessary or appropriate to expedite the prompt and orderly conduct of the business of the Commission and the panels thereof."

SEC. 6. Subsection (d) of section 307 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"(d) No license granted for the operation of a broadcasting station shall be for a longer term than 3 years and no license so granted for any other class of station shall be for a longer term than 5 years, and any license granted may be revoked as hereinafter provided. Upon the expiration of any license, upon application therefor, a renewal of such license may be granted from time to time for a term of not to exceed 3 years in the case of broadcasting licenses and not to exceed 5 years in the case of other licenses."

SEC. 7. So much of subsection (a) of section 308 of such act as precedes the second proviso is amended to read as follows: "The Commission may grant instruments of authorization entitling the holders thereof to construct or operate apparatus for the transmission of energy, or communications, or signals by radio or modifications or renewals thereof, only upon written application therefor received by it: Provided, That (1) in cases of emergency found by the Commission involving danger to life or property or due to damage to equipment, or (2) during the continuance of any war in which the United States is engaged and when such action is necessary for the national defense or security or otherwise in furtherance of the war effort, the Commission may grant and issue authority to construct or operate apparatus for the transmission of energy or communications or signals by radio during the emergency so found by the Commission or during the continuance of any such war, in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as the Commission shall by regulation prescribe, and without the filing of a formal application, but no such authority shall be granted for a period beyond the period of the emergency requiring it nor remain effective beyond such period:".

SEC. 8. Section 309 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"HEARINGS ON APPLICATIONS FOR LICENSES; FORM OF LICENSES; CONDITIONS ATTACHED TO LICENSES

"SEC. 309. (a) If upon examination of any application provided for in section 308 the Commission shall determine that public interest, convenience, and necessity would be served by the granting thereof, it shall authorize the issuance of the instrument of authorization for which application is made in accordance with said finding.

"(b) If upon examination of any such application the Commission is unable to make the finding specified in subsection (a) of this section, it shall forthwith notify the applicant and other known parties in interest of the grounds and reasons for its inability to make such finding. Such notice, which shall precede formal designation for a hearing, shall advise the applicant and all other known parties in interest of all objections made to the application as well as the source and nature of such objections. The parties in interest shall include, in addition to such others as the Commission may determine, any person whose status as the holder of a construction permit or license would be adversely affected because of the authorization or action proposed and any person then an applicant for facilities whose status as such applicant would be adversely affected. Following such notice, the Commission shall formally designate the application for hearing on the grounds or reasons then obtaining and shall notify the applicant and all other known parties in interest of such action and the grounds and reasons therefor, specifying with particularity the matters and things in issue but not including issues or requirements phrased generally. The parties in interest, if any, who are not notified by the Commission of its action with respect to a particular application may acquire the status of a party to the proceeding thereon by filing a petition for intervention showing the basis for their interest at any time not less than 10 days prior to the date of hearing. Any hearing subsequently held upon such application shall be a full hearing in which the applicant and all other parties in interest shall be permitted to participate but in which both the burden of proceeding with the introduction of evidence upon any issue specified by the Commission, as well as the burden of proof upon all such issues, shall be upon the applicant.

"(c) When any instrument of authorization is granted by the Commission without a hearing as provided in subsection (a) hereof, such grant shall remain subject to protest as hereinafter provided for a period of 30 days. During such 30-day period any party in interest, as defined in subsection (b) hereof, may file a protest directed to such grant and request a hearing on said application so granted. Any protest so filed shall contain such allegations of fact as will show the protestant to be a party in interest and shall specify with particularity the matter and things in issue but shall not include issues or allegations phrased generally. Upon the filing of such protest the application involved shall be set for hearing upon the issues set forth in said protest, together with such further specific issues, if any, as may be prescribed by the Commission. In any hearing subsequently held upon such application all issues specified by the Commission shall be tried in the same manner provided in subsection (b) hereof but with respect of all issues set forth in the protest and not specifically adopted by the Commission, both the burden of proceeding with the introduction of evidence and the burden of proof shall be upon the protestant. The hearing and determination of cases arising under this subsection shall be expedited by the Commission and pending hearing and decision the effective date of the Commission's action to which protest is made shall be postponed to the date of the Commission's decision after hearing, unless the authorization involved is necessary to the maintenance or conduct of an existing service, in which event the Commission shall authorize the applicant to utilize the facilities or authorization in question pending the Commission's decision after hearing.

"(d) Such station licenses as the Commission may grant shall be in such general form as it may prescribe, but each license shall contain, in addition to other provisions, a statement of the following conditions to which such license shall be subject: (1) The station license shall not vest in the licensee any right to operate the station nor any right in the use of the frequencies designated in the license beyond the term thereof nor in any other manner than authorized therein; (2) neither the license nor the right granted thereunder shall be assigned or otherwise transferred in violation of this act; (3) every license issued under this act shall be subject in terms to the right of use or control conferred by section 606 hereof."

SEC. 9. Subsection (b) of section 310 of said act is amended to read as follows:

"(b) No instrument of authorization granted by the Commission entitling the holder thereof to construct or to operate radio apparatus and no rights granted thereunder shall be transferred, assigned, or disposed of in any manner voluntarily or involuntarily, directly, or indirectly, or by transfer of control of any corporation holding such instrument of authorization, to any person except upon application to the Commission and upon finding by the Commission that the proposed transferee or assignee possesses the qualifications required of an original permittee or licensee. The procedure for handling such application shall be that provided in section 309."

SEC. 10. Section 311 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 311. The Commission is hereby directed to refuse a station license and/or the permit hereinafter required for the construction of a station to any person (or to any person directly or indirectly controlled by such person) whose license has been revoked by a court under section 313."

SEC. 11. Section 312 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"REVOCATION OF LICENSES; CEASE-AND-DESIST ORDERS

"SEC. 312. (a) Any station license may be revoked (1) because of conditions coming to the attention of the Commission since the granting of such license which would have warranted the Commission in refusing to grant such license, or (2) for violation or failure to observe any of the restrictions or provisions of a treaty ratified by the United States, or (3) for violation of or failure to observe the terms and conditions of any cease-and-desist order issued by the Commission pursuant to subsection (b) hereof: Provided, That no such order of revocation shall take effect until 30 days' notice in writing thereof, stating the cause for the proposed revocation, has been given to the licensee. Such licensee may make written application to the Commission at any time within said 30 days for a hearing upon such order, and upon the filing of such written application said order of revocation shall stand suspended until the conclusion of the hearing. Upon the conclusion of said hearing the Commission may affirm, modify, or revoke said order of revocation.

"(b) Where a station licensee (1) has failed to operate substantially as set forth in the license, or (2) has failed to observe any of the restrictions and conditions of this act or of a treaty ratified by the United States, or (3) has violated or failed to observe any rule or regulation of the Commission authorized by this act, the Commission may institute a proceeding by serving upon the licensee an order to show cause why it should not cease and desist from such action. Said order shall contain a statement of the particulars and matters with respect to which the Commission is inquiring and shall call upon the licensee to appear before the Commission at a time and place therein stated, but in no event less than 30 days after receipt of such notice, and give evidence upon the matter specified in said order. If, after hearing, or a waiver thereof by the licensee, the Commission determines that a cease-and-desist order should issue, it shall make a report in writing stating the findings of the Commission and the grounds and reasons therefor and shall cause the same to be served on said licensee, together with such order."

SEC. 12. Part I of title III of such act is amended by adding the following new section:

"MODIFICATION BY COMMISSION OF CONSTRUCTION PERMITS OR LICENSES

"SEC. 330. (a) Any station license granted under the provisions of this act or the construction permit required thereby may be modified by the Commission either for a limited time or for the duration of the term thereof, if, in the judgment of the Commission, such action will promote the public interest, convenience, and necessity, or the provisions of this act or of any treaty ratified by the United States will be more fully complied with: Provided, That no such order of modification shall become final until the holder of such outstanding license or permit shall have been notified in writing of the proposed action and the grounds and reasons therefor, and shall have been given reasonable opportunity, in no event less than 30 days, to show cause by public hearing, if requested, why such order of modification should not issue.

"(b) In any case where a hearing is conducted pursuant to the provisions of this section or section 312, both the burden of proceeding with the introduction of evidence and the burden of proof shall be upon the Commission."

SEC. 13. Part I of title III of such act is amended by adding the following new section:

"LIMITATION ON QUASI-JUDICIAL POWERS

"SEC. 331. No license granted and issued under the authority of this act for the operation of any radio station shall be modified by the Commission, except in the manner provided in section 330 (a) hereof, and no such license may be revoked, terminated, or otherwise invalidated by the Commission, except in the manner and for the reasons provided in section 312 (a) hereof. When application is made for renewal of an existing license, which cannot be disposed of by the Commission under the provisions of section 309 (a) hereof, the Commission shall employ the procedure specified in section 309 (b) hereof, except that in any hearing subsequently held upon such application both the burden of proceeding with the introduction of evidence and the burden of proof shall be upon the Commission or those who oppose the granting of such renewal, and pending such hearing and final decision pursuant thereto the Commission shall continue such license in effect."

SEC. 14. Part I of title III of such act is amended by adding the following new section:

"LIMITATION ON RULE-MAKING POWERS; DISCRIMINATION PROHIBITED

"SEC. 332. No sanction shall be imposed or substantive rule or order be issued except within jurisdiction delegated to the Commission and as authorized by law. The Commission shall make or promulgate no rule or regulation of substance or procedure, the purpose or result of which is to effect a discrimination between persons based upon race, religious or political affiliation or kind of lawful occupation or business association."

SEC. 15. The heading of section 401 of such act is amended to read:

"JURISDICTION TO ENFORCE ACT AND ORDERS OF COMMISSION; DECLARATORY ORDERS" and such section is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection (d) as follows:

"(d) The Commission is authorized and directed, in its sound discretion and with like effect as in the case of other orders, to issue a declaratory order to terminate a controversy or remove uncertainty. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 5 (d) of the Administrative Procedure Act (U. S. C., 1946 ed., title 5, sec. 1009) declaratory orders shall be issued only upon the petition of, and after notice to and opportunity for hearing by, persons who are bona fide applicants for, or the holders of, construction permits or licenses, or otherwise subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, and shall not bind or affect the rights of persons who are not parties to such proceedings. Such orders shall be available to declare rights and other legal relations arising under the provisions of any treaty ratified by the United States, under any provision of this act, or under any order, rule, regulation, term, condition, limitation, or requirement issued, promulgated, or adopted by the Commission, whether or not involving failure to comply therewith."

SEC. 16. Section 402 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 402. (a) The provisions of the act of October 22, 1913 (62 Stat. 992), as amended, relating to the enforcing or setting aside of orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission are hereby made applicable to suits to enforce, enjoin, set aside, annul, or suspend any order of the Commission under this act (except those appealable under the provisions of subsection (b) hereof), and such suits are hereby authorized to be brought as provided in that act. In addition to the venues specified in that act, suits to enjoin, set aside, annul, or suspend, but not to enforce, any such order of the Commission may also be brought in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.

"(b) Appeals may be taken from decisions and orders of the Commission to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in any of the following cases:

"(1) By any applicant for any instrument of authorization required by this act, or the regulations of the Commission made pursuant to this act, for the construction or operation of apparatus for the transmission of energy, or communications, or signals by radio, whose application is denied by the Commission.

"(2) By any applicant for the renewal or modification of any such instrument of authorization whose application is denied by the Commission.

"(3) By any party to an application for authority to assign any such instrument of authorization or to transfer control of any corporation holding such instrument of authorization whose application is denied by the Commission.

"(4) By any applicant for the permit required by section 325 of this act whose application has been denied by the Commission or any permittee under said section whose permit has been revoked by the Commission.

"(5) By the holder of any instrument of authorization required by this act, or the regulations of the Commission made pursuant to this act, for the construction or operation of apparatus for the transmission of energy, or communications or signals by radio, which instrument has been modified or revoked by the Commission.

"(6) By any other person who is aggrieved or whose interests are adversely affected by any order of the Commission granting or denying any application described in paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (4) hereof.

"(7) By any person upon whom an order to cease and desist has been served under section 312 (b) of this act.

"(8) By any party to a proceeding under section 401 who is aggrieved or whose interests are adversely affected by a declaratory order entered by the Commission.

"(9) By any radio operator whose license has been suspended by the Commission.

"(c) Such appeal shall be taken by filing a notice of appeal with the court within 30 days after the entry of the order complained of. Such notice of appeal shall contain a concise statement of the nature of the proceedings as to which the appeal is taken; a concise statement of the reasons on which the appellant intends to rely, separately stated and numbered; and proof of service of a true copy of said notice and statement upon the Commission. Upon filing of such notice, the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction of the proceedings and of the questions determined therein and shall have power, by order, directed to the Commission or any other party to the appeal, to grant such temporary relief as it may deem just and proper. Orders granting temporary relief may be either affirmative or negative in their scope and application so as to permit either the maintenance of the status quo in the matter in which the appeal is taken or the restoration of a position or status terminated or adversely affected by the order appealed from and shall, unless otherwise ordered by the court, be effective pending hearing and determination of said appeal and compliance by the Commission with the final judgment of the court rendered in said appeal.

"(d) Upon the filing of any such notice of appeal the Commission shall, not later than 5 days after the date of service upon it, notify each person shown by the records of the Commission to be interested in said appeal of the filing and pendency of the same and shall thereafter permit any such person to inspect and make copies of said notice and statement of reasons therefor at the office of the Commission in the city of Washington. Within 30 days after the filing of an appeal, the Commission shall file with the court a copy of the order complained of, a full statement in writing of the facts and grounds relied upon by it in support of the order involved upon said appeal, and the originals or certified copies of all papers and evidence presented to and considered by it in entering said order.

"(e) Within 30 days after the filing of an appeal any interested person may intervene and participate in the proceedings had upon said appeal by filing with the court a notice of intention to intervene and a verified statement showing the nature of the interest of such party, together with proof of service of true copies of said notice and statement, both upon appellant and upon the Commission. Any person who would be aggrieved or whose interest would be adversely affected by a reversal or modification of the order of the Commission complained of shall be considered an interested party.

"(f) The record and briefs upon which any such appeal shall be heard and determined by the court shall contain such information and material, and shall be prepared within such time and in such manner as the court may by rule prescribe.

"(g) At the earliest convenient time the court shall hear and determine the appeal upon the record before it in the manner prescribed by section 10 (e) of the Administrative Procedure Act (U. S. C. 1946 ed., title 5, sec. 1009).

"(h) In the event that the court shall render a decision and enter an order reversing the order of the Commission, it shall remand the case to the Commission to carry out the judgment of the court and it shall be the duty of the Commission, in the absence of the proceedings to review such judgment, to forthwith give effect thereto, and unless otherwise ordered by the court, to do so upon the basis of the proceedings already had and the record upon which said appeal was heard and determined.

"(i) The court may, in its discretion, enter judgment for costs in favor of or against an appellant, or other interested parties intervening in said appeal, but not against the Commission, depending upon the nature of the issues involved upon said appeal and the outcome thereof.

"(j) The court's judgment shall be final, subject, however, to review by the Supreme Court of the United States as hereinafter provided—

"(1) an appeal may be taken direct to the Supreme Court of the United States in any case wherein the jurisdiction of the court is invoked, or sought to be invoked, for the purpose of reviewing any decision or order entered by the Commission in proceedings instituted by the Commission which have as their object and purpose the revocation of an existing license or any decision or order entered by the Commission in proceedings which involve the failure or refusal of the Commission to renew an existing license. Such appeal shall be taken by the filing of an application therefor or notice thereof within 30 days after the entry of the judgment sought to be reviewed, and in the event such an appeal is taken the record shall be made up and the case docketed in the Supreme Court of the United States within 60 days from the time such an appeal is allowed under such rules as may be prescribed.

"(2) in all other cases, review by the Supreme Court of the United States shall be upon writ of certiorari on petition therefor under section 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended, by the appellant, by the Commission, or by any interested party intervening in the appeal, or by certification by the court pursuant to the provision of section 239 of the Judicial Code, as amended."

SEC. 17. The heading of section 405 of such act is amended to read: "Rehearings before panels or Commission," and such section is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 405. (a) After a decision, order, or requirement has been made by the Commission or either panel thereof in any proceeding, any party thereto, or any other person aggrieved or whose interests are adversely affected thereby, may petition for rehearing. When the decision, order, or requirement has been made by the whole Commission, the petition for rehearing shall be directed to the whole Commission; when the decision, order, or requirement is made by a panel of the Commission, petition for rehearing shall be directed to that panel; petitions directed to the whole Commission requesting a rehearing in any matter determined by a panel thereof shall not be permitted or considered. Petitions for rehearing must be filed within 30 days from the entry of any decision, order, or requirement complained of and except for those cases in which the decision, order, or requirement challenged is necessary for the maintenance or conduct of an existing service, the filing of such a petition shall automatically stay the effective date thereof until after decision on said petition. The filing of a petition for rehearing shall not be a condition precedent to judicial review of any such decision, order, or requirement, except where the party seeking such review was not a party to the proceedings resulting in such decision, order, or requirement, or where the party seeking such review relies on questions of fact or law upon which the Commission or the appropriate panel has been afforded no opportunity to pass. Rehearings shall be governed by such general rules as the Commission may establish, provided that, except for newly discovered evidence or evidence otherwise available only since the original taking of evidence, no evidence shall be taken on any rehearing. The time within which an appeal must be taken under section 402 (b) hereof shall be computed from the date upon which orders are entered disposing of all petitions for rehearing filed in any case, but any decision, order, or requirement made after such rehearing reversing, changing, or modifying the original determination shall be subject to the same provisions with respect to rehearing as an original order."

SEC. 18. Section 409 (a) of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 409. (a) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 7 (a) of the Administrative Procedure Act (U. S. C., 1946 ed., title 5, sec. 1006), all cases in which a hearing is required by the provisions of this act or by other applicable provisions of law shall be conducted by the Commission or by the panel thereof having jurisdiction of the subject matter, or by one or more examiners provided for in section 11 of the Administrative Procedure Act, designated by the Commission. The officer or officers presiding at any such hearing shall have the same authority and duties exercised in the same manner and subject to the same conditions specified in section 7 of that act.

"(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 8 of the Administrative Procedure Act, the officer or officers conducting a hearing shall prepare and file an intermediate report. In all such cases the Commission, or the panel having jurisdiction thereof, shall permit the filing of exceptions to such intermediate report by any party to the proceeding and shall, upon request, hear oral argument on such exceptions before the entry of any final decision, order, or requirement. All decisions, including the intermediate report, shall become a part of the record and shall include a statement of (1) findings and conclusions, as well as the basis therefor, upon all material issues of fact, law, or discretion, presented on the record; and (2) the appropriate decision, order, or requirement.

"(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 5 (c) of the Administrative Procedure Act, no officer conducting a hearing pursuant to (a) and (b) hereof shall, except to the extent required for the disposition of ex parte matters as authorized by law, consult any person or party on any fact or question of law in issue, unless upon notice and opportunity for all parties to participate; nor shall such officer be responsible to or subject to the supervision or direction of any other person engaged in the performance of investigative, prosecuting, or other functions for the Commission or any other agency of the Government. No person or persons engaged in the performance of investigative or prosecuting functions for the Commission or for any other agency of the Government shall participate or advise in the proceedings described in (a) and (b) hereof, except as a witness or counsel in public proceedings. The Commission shall not employ attorneys or other persons for the purpose of reviewing transcripts or preparing intermediate reports or final decisions, except that legal assistants assigned separately to a Commission member may, for such Commission member, review such transcripts and prepare such drafts. No intermediate report shall be reviewed either before or after its publication by any person other than a member of the Commission or his legal assistant, as above provided, and no examiner, who conducts a hearing, shall advise or consult with the Commission with respect to his intermediate report or with respect to exceptions taken to his findings, rulings, or recommendations."

(b) Subsections (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), (i), and (j) of section 409 are amended to read subsections (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), (i), (j), (k), and (l), respectively.

SEC. 19. Section 414 of such act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Except as specifically provided in this act the provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act shall apply in all proceedings under this act."

"FRAUD BY RADIO

"SEC. 1343. Whoever, having devised or intending to devise any scheme or artifice to defraud, or for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises, shall transmit or cause to be transmitted by means of radio communication or interstate wire communication, any writings, signs, signals, pictures, or sounds for the purpose of executing such scheme or artifice, or whoever operating any radio station for which a license is required by any law of the United States, knowingly permits the transmission of any such communication, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both."

SEC. 21. If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances should not be affected thereby.

HOME RULE FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1527) to provide for home rule and reorganization in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Clarence Pearce, of the Legislative Reference Service, may sit with me during the discussion of the home rule bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, consent is granted.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], I offer and send to the desk an amendment for which I request immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 11, line 11, it is proposed to strike out "(other than a zoning ordinance)" and insert "(other than a zoning ordinance and except as provided in subsection (d))."

On page 11, between lines 14 and 15, it is proposed to insert the following:

(d) An ordinance which changes any law, policy, custom, rule, or regulation, in effect in the District on the effective date of this part, relating to racial segregation (but not including nonsegregation) in the public schools and school playgrounds of the District, in recreational areas under the administration of the Director of the Department of Recreation, or in restaurants, hotels, places of amusement, or other public places in the District shall take effect as law only as provided in section 338.

On page 18, between lines 14 and 15, insert the following new section:

REFERENDUMS ON ORDINANCES AND LAWS CHANGING RACIAL SEGREGATION POLICY

SEC. 338. (a) Before any ordinance or law which changes any law, policy, custom, rule, or regulation, in effect in the District on the effective date of part 2 of this title, relating to racial segregation (but not including nonsegregation) in the public schools or school playgrounds of the District, in recreational areas under the administration of the Director of the Department of Recreation, or in restaurants, hotels, places of amusement, or other public places in the District becomes effective, such ordinance or law shall be submitted by the Board of Elections to the qualified electors for a referendum thereon at the first election which is held not less than 30 days after the date such ordinance is passed or such law is enacted. If an ordinance or law so submitted is approved by a majority of the qualified electors voting thereon, it shall take effect on the day following the day on which the Board of Elections certifies the result of the referendum.

(b) The Board of Elections is authorized to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of subsection (a).

On page 20, between lines 11 and 12, insert the following:

the enactment of such law, it has been approved by the qualified electors in the manner provided in section 338 in which case it shall take effect at the time provided in such section.

On page 22, beginning with line 5, strike out all through line 10, and insert the following:

SEC. 405. Each legislative proposal (except a legislative proposal authorizing the issuance of bonds and a legislative proposal relating to changes in racial segregation) which has become law, and each law authorizing the issuance of bonds which has been approved in a referendum as provided in section 702, and each law relating to changes in racial segregation which has been approved in a referendum as provided in section 338, shall be printed in the United States Statutes at Large in the same volume as the public laws.

On page 76, line 15, after "title", insert "section 338,".

On page 2, after "Sec. 337. Investigations by District Council.", insert "Sec. 338. Referendums on ordinances and laws changing racial segregation policy."

On page 12, line 11, strike out "or 336" and insert "336, or 338".

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi desire to have the amendments considered singly or en bloc?

Mr. EASTLAND. I should like to have them considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, the amendments will be considered en bloc.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, this amendment simply provides that in personal matters of segregation, any changes proposed by way of ordinance by the Commissioners must be submitted to the people of the District of Columbia and voted on at the next election.

Today we hear considerable talk about majority rule and about democracy. We hear many Senators on the floor of the Senate state that they believe in letting the people determine their own destiny and their own rules of personal conduct. This amendment would simply provide for that.

Under the bill, if it is enacted, when the Commissioners adopt an ordinance, it is sent to Congress; and if not disapproved by Congress within 45 days, it takes effect. In matters of segregation, then, the amendment before it takes effect, must be submitted to the people to be voted on at the next election.

Mr. President, there has been a great deal of synthetic argument throughout the country about conditions within the District of Columbia; a synthetic clamor has arisen that the segregation rules of the District should be changed. We see many big politicians who state that they desire to abolish segregation within the District. It is peculiar indeed that the men who advocate the abolition of segregation here, the big politicians, the men in the upper income-tax brackets, believe in and practice segregation themselves. They believe in and practice segregation for their families. As a rule their children go to private schools, whose racial policy is for white only. I am fortunate in having three children in a private school in the city of Washington, a school that draws a color line, just as it is drawn in the public schools here. I am amazed at the number of high officials in the Government, men who give statements to the press that they desire to see segregation abolished and insist that we must adopt a progressive course, whose own children nevertheless, beyond the reach of racial mixture, are placed in private schools where it is known the color line will be maintained, even though there should be a mixture in the schools in Washington. For political purposes these persons pressure key people within the District to abolish segregation, and at the same time, while they live segregated lives themselves, they attempt to force it on Government clerks and on people in the low-income brackets who cannot protect themselves. But when it comes to maintaining it for themselves and their families, they draw the color line.

Mr. President, the amendment simply provides that the people of the District, before an ordinance takes effect, shall have the right to vote, and the ordinance shall not take effect until approved by the people of the District in a plebiscite. If the people of the District vote to abolish segregation in the public-school system, if they vote to abolish segregation in hotels, in restaurants, then the rule of the people will prevail. But the amendment gets around the idea of big politicians for political purposes slipping around the back door to pressure key people within the District to break down the customs here without giving the people a chance to make their will known. If this is a democracy, the people of the District of Columbia should determine policies and fix the rules by legislative processes, by democratic processes; and that, Mr. President, is all the amendment seeks to accomplish. How anyone who believes in majority rule and in letting the people decide could oppose the amendment is beyond my comprehension.

Mr. President, I think by all means the amendment should be adopted. It is well known that some influences in this country have tried to secure adoption of the program in the rest of the country and have failed. They tried to force it on the States, and have failed. They have failed because the people in the States have the power of the ballot and can protect themselves. In the State of California an FEPC bill was left to a vote of the people of that great State. Every newspaper in the State was for FEPC. All the big politicians in the State who had been pressured from behind the scenes by left-wing groups were for the FEPC. When it was placed on the ballot the sovereign people of California went into the booths and defeated it by a vote of 3 to 1, carrying every county in the State. There was not even organized opposition in the State of California.

Having failed in the States, a program has now been adopted to use the District of Columbia as a guinea pig, to force the issue on the District, because the people here do not have suffrage, they do not have power to defend and protect themselves. The amendment simply leaves the whole question to a vote of the people of the District, to be determined by them. If they want mixed schools, they can have mixed schools; they can have them by the will of the people of the District. If they want all the segregation customs and rules of the District abolished, they can abolish them by their vote, not by pressure groups pressuring key politicians from behind the scenes. They can abolish them by democratic processes, or they can retain them by democratic processes through the legislative system. I submit the amendment is in line with democracy, it is in line with the very highest concepts of Americanism, and should be adopted.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, since I am a cosponsor of the amendment with the senior Senator from Mississippi, I feel that I should say a few words in behalf of the amendment. As has been so well stated by the senior Senator from Mississippi, there has been raised the hue and cry, "Let the people rule." The amendment in my opinion gives the people of the District a right to say what they prefer to have in the District of Columbia, in the schools and on the playgrounds, whether segregation or nonsegregation. Is it believed that we should pass upon that question in the Senate, without giving the people of the District a right to decide the question for themselves? That is the sole question before the Senate at the present time. If we are to turn over to the people of the District the right to rule the District, then let them say whether they want segregation within the District. As I see it at the present time, some people in the District would prefer to have segregation, while others want nonsegregation within the District. I believe it is also true that some of those whom we call the higher-ups within the District, those who are receiving big salaries within the District, do not send their children to the public schools. Do they request that their children be sent to schools attended both by white and colored, where tuition is required to be paid?

The issue involved is whether the people of the District of Columbia should be given the right to say whether they want segregation within the District. If my memory serves me correctly, within the past few days there has been mass meeting after mass meeting within the District on the question of segregation in playgrounds. It is an issue which the people themselves are at this particular time debating. Do Senators listening to me at this time believe it would be for the best interest of the people of the Nation's Capital City to take the matter out of their hands and turn it over to a commission, leaving it entirely with the commission, without giving the people the right to pass upon this vital question?

It so happens that in the District of Columbia it will be found that in certain sections of the city the population surrounding a public school is 90 to 95 percent white. It will be found that another section is inhabited by colored persons, thus indicating that the people of Washington have, so to speak, segregated themselves.

A few weeks ago I was driving in the State of New Jersey and happened to pass a school at recess time. I noticed that on the playground the children had segregated themselves. The white children were not with the colored children on the playground. There may be no law to demand that situation in New Jersey, but the children segregate themselves. Even after school was out, white children were walking along the street together, and colored children, in a group, were walking along together. This indicates that the people themselves want to be segregated.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Does the Senator from South Carolina know that the State of New Jersey adopted a new constitution in 1947 containing a specific provision against segregation?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Although the State may have passed a law to that effect, the people of the State are now segregating themselves, as can be seen on the playgrounds there. I noticed that under one shade tree white children were playing together and under another shade tree colored children were playing together.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. The distinguished Senator from New Jersey spoke of the constitution of his State. The matter was approved by the people of New Jersey who voted to insert a section in the constitution which prohibited segregation. All we are suggesting is that Congress give to the people of the District of Columbia the same right which is possessed by the people of New Jersey.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EASTLAND. The Senator from South Carolina has the floor.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Does the Senator understand the bill to be one which gives a republican form of government to the people of the District or a true democracy under which the people will have referendums and vote en masse on any question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I would answer that question by——

Mr. EASTLAND. Is the Senator asking me that question?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I should be glad to have an answer from either Senator.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. EASTLAND. In many cities and many States such questions are submitted to a vote of the people. That is especially true when there are pressure groups behind the scenes which would deprive the people of their rights. When it came to a new constitution containing a provision such as the one of which the Senator from New Jersey spoke, the question was submitted to and approved by the people of the State of New Jersey at an election. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. The Senator is quite correct.

Mr. EASTLAND. I do not desire to see the people of the District deprived of that right. I am certain the Senator from New Jersey would not tell the people of the District they did not have a right to vote on the question. What we seek to do is to give the people of the District the same right possessed by the people of the State of New Jersey, namely, the right which was accorded the people of the State of New Jersey to determine the identical question which we are now discussing. The same question would be determined by the people of the District, under the amendment which we have offered.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, what the senior Senator from Mississippi has stated is absolutely correct. In the amendment now being discussed, we ask only that the people of the District of Columbia be given a right to vote upon the question of whether they desire segregation. That is what the amendment amounts to. We contend that the people of the District have a right to pass upon that question before the segregation laws are broken down.

It will be found that there are some people and some newspapers entertaining different ideas on the question even of home rule. Some think there should be home rule. Some believe that the present system would probably be better than home rule within the District.

I hold in my hand an editorial published in the Washington Star of Sunday, July 6, 1947, entitled "Civic Problems, Civic Bodies. An Independence Day Meditation; Representation Essential to Home Rule." It will be noted that this editorial contends that it is not home rule unless the people are given representation in Congress and some representation in the matter of electing a President. We know that if home rule is granted, there will not be an end of discussion of the matter in the House of Representatives and the Senate. This discussion will have just begun. The people will be back next year and the year after and the year after that regarding the matter discussed in this editorial, the matter of giving the people representation in Congress. After all, in the Constitution the Congress is given the duty of checking and controlling the affairs of the District, and if that is to be changed, the Constitution will have to be amended. If there is a desire to change the system of government existing within the District, then probably we should change the Constitution of the United States and let the District in as a State, which would be absolutely at variance with the action and the ideas of the founding fathers who created the District of Columbia.

The status of the District of Columbia is peculiar. The District is not a State; it is not a Territory. We have here within the District the Capital City of United States. It belongs to all the States of the Union. I was about to say that we had spent millions of dollars in the District, building it up, but I will say it has been billions of dollars.

I ofttimes wonder if it would not be best to move the city of Washington and put the Capital somewhere else, nearer the center of the United States. I believe it would be better for the United States as a whole if we did that. One reason that leads me to say that is that we took similar action in my State. At one time the capital of South Carolina was located away off at one side of the State. Finally the people decided to put the capital in the exact center of the State, so the State was surveyed, and it was found that the center was away out in the woods, in the fields, where there was no city, not even a town. But the State bought a tract 2 acres square, laid out the necessary roads, and they built Columbia, S. C., and made it the capital of my State, geographically in the center of the State.

Mr. President, if similar action has been taken in States, why could it not be taken by the Federal Government? Personally, I should like to see that done. Then the Capital would not be so far from Oklahoma, it would not be so far from California, it would not be so far from the States of Washington and Oregon. Some of the States which are in the geographical center of the United States would have a capital close at home. But as it is, Washington is situated in the East, close to the Atlantic Ocean.

Let me give another reason why I should like to see the location of the Capital changed. If we ever had an atomic war, what would happen to Washington, the seat of the Federal Government, the first thing? Think of it. For the reasons I have given I believe that while we are speaking about the Capital City, it might be a good idea for us to think a little of moving the Capital to a location which might be for the best interests of all the United States in the future.

I know the people of Washington would not like that; but if we moved the Capital out of the city, what would happen? What would happen to the employees of the Government if we were to move the Capital out of Washington? I fear that the city would not increase in population in the future, but some other place, where the Capital was located, would build up.

When the Capital City was located, Mr. President, the founding fathers did not want it to be within a State. Have Senators noticed that? Virginia and Maryland gave the land to the Government on condition that the Capital City would be located here. New York was pulling for it, Philadelphia was pulling for it, but the Capital was not located in any State. The founding fathers decided that they would rather have the Capital City here, not in any way connected with any State.

Mr. President, there was a reason for that. Let us see what the reason back of it was. Can there be dual control, and satisfaction? If we do not continue to keep, in the Government itself, control of Washington, D. C., the Capital City, which belongs to all States of the Nation, I predict that there will be many headaches we have never before heard about. Did anyone ever hear of any trouble in States where there was dual control between the city and the State?

What State in the Union does not have trouble in law enforcement, one jurisdiction accusing the other, saying that they did this wrong and the other thing wrong? Have we ever heard of a city being accused of protecting criminals? Have we ever heard of a city accusing the State law-enforcement officials of protecting criminals? Here in Washington the control comes down directly from the Congress, as written in the Constitution of the United States.

Why was the Capital City located here on swamp land and in the woods? The Capital was built here in order to get away from State control, and to assure control by the representatives of all the States. That is the reason for the character of government Washington has. But the minute home rule is granted, think of what will happen. Look at the plat on the wall. A part of the rule comes from the President, a part of it comes from the Board of Commissioners, and there is mixed and dual control. I say here and now that home rule would bring about plenty of headaches. Especially would that be true at this particular time. I am sorry to say that here in Washington there are many Communists walking the streets, some of whom have the audacity to say, "If another war comes, we will fight for Russia instead of the United States."

Referring to the bondsman who had to forfeit the $22,500 he put up as a bond for Gerhart Eisler, personally I wish we could get that much money as a result of about 500 more Communists in the United States jumping their bail, and going back to their own country. I wish we could pick up that much money as a result of Communists jumping their bail and leaving the country. I am in favor of letting everyone who says he would fight for another nation in the event that nation went to war with the United States go back to that nation, or be sent back to it now. I believe Senators can find such persons floating around here in the city of Washington.

We the people of the Nation have control of the city of Washington now. Remember that 2,000,000 organized Communists are in charge of the Government of Russia now. Compare that number with the total population of Russia. Bear in mind what a small percentage that organized number represents when compared to the total population of the country. So long as the representatives of all the States are in control in Washington I believe we are, to a certain extent, protected against any such thing as happened in Russia. If it were not for the situation that now exists here, how easy it would be for a comparatively small number to rush in and take over.

I shall present to the Senate before I get through, though it may be late this evening before I shall be able to do it, the comparative percentages of those who are permanent residents of the District, and those who retain residence in their States. When Senators find the percentage of persons who could take no part in the local government, they will readily see that the voting possibilities within the District will be cut down.

Speaking of voting possibilities in the District, how many members of Senators' staffs desire to keep their voting residence back home? How many of their wives desire to keep their voting privileges back home? How many persons employed in government, for whom Senators have secured jobs, and who are hoping to secure promotions through the Senators who secured the jobs for them, desire to retain their voting rights in their own States? Some may say there is no politics in securing promotions, and no politics in securing jobs, but so long as ours is a democratic form of government it is but natural that individuals will expect favors in return for favors received. That is human nature, and we cannot get away from it.

Persons who have Government jobs hope to secure promotions, and everyone who hopes to secure a promotion is not going to jeopardize the vote he may cast for a Senator at home by accepting the privilege of voting in the District of Columbia. Does any Senator think such a person would exchange his vote in the State of his residence for a vote in the District? Excluding such persons from the total number who would vote in Washington would cause a considerable reduction in the total number who would vote here.

Mr. President, the situation in the District of Columbia is different from that in any State of the Union. The amendment which some of us have submitted would give the people the right of referendum on the question of segregation. The District has not been permitted to exercise the right of referendum on that particular issue. Only Congress can give them that right. When such a vote has been taken, that much will have been decided. I think to a certain extent we are taking a chance in that respect. Then let the Board or council pass upon the question and use its influence to secure passage of a measure dealing with the subject, however it may be determined. Let the people exercise their voting right and say what their wishes are in the matter. As we see it, it would be the democratic way to proceed. It would give the people the right we think they should have. For that reason I want to have a vote on the amendment, so as to see what is going to happen on that issue. If the amendment is adopted, and that right is given the people of the District, we will proceed further in the debate on the bill and determine what to do. But not until the Senate takes action on this particular issue of giving the people the right to decide whether they want segregation, will I care to consider what further action should be taken.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I shall address myself briefly to the pending amendment to the bill. As I understand the situation, the amendment permits the District Council to pass ordinances and legislative proposals which would change the laws, policies, customs, rules and regulations relating to racial segregation in the District, but requires that each such ordinance, and legislative proposal, would have to be approved by the voters of the District in a referendum before the proposed change would become effective.

Further, with reference to the operation of the bill, I understand that most of these major changes would also have to be submitted to the Congress, but unless the amendment is adopted there would be no referendum by the people on those questions.

Mr. President, I shall address myself primarily to the question of segregation in the public schools as it comes up under the amendment. I think anyone who comes from the area from which I come, where the races are virtually evenly divided, and where, in major part they get along so well together, owes it to the other Members of the Congress to give his opinion on this most serious and far-reaching question.

I do not think any more serious setback could come to the future educational advancement and opportunities of members of the Negro race than to have the policy of nonsegregation forced upon the people of any area without their consent. I shall not so much argue in favor of segregation itself—although there is no doubt in my mind that it is far better for all concerned, where the races exist together in appreciable numbers, that they go their separate ways, particularly with reference to matters of public schools and related social activities. I think that is almost the unanimous opinion of the thinking people of both races in areas where they live together in appreciable numbers. I do not think that will be seriously contradicted by any unbiased mind, or from any unbiased source.

I wish to repeat and emphasize that I do not believe there could be a more serious setback to the future educational opportunities and advancement of members of the Negro race than to have nonsegregation in the public schools forced upon the people of any area without their consent. Under the terms of the proposed law, if the city council of the District should order this change, the question would then be submitted to the Congress; and if the Congress failed to reject the proposal within 45 days, it would become law. With all due deference to Members of Congress, this is one of the questions which, if submitted to Congress, would not receive fair consideration on the merits and apart from political implications. That is true of a few other subjects, but particularly with reference to inflammatory questions like this. I do not believe that it would be possible, under the political circumstances throughout the United States, for that question to receive the fair, impartial, calm, deliberate consideration to which it is entitled from Members of Congress. As a practical matter, I think a great number of outside inflammatory influences would be injected into that question, influences which do not belong there. In the final vote perhaps some Members of the Congress would be influenced by such considerations. So as a practical matter, I do not believe that plan would be a solution for this serious and far-reaching question.

On the other hand, under the provisions of the amendment which has been offered by the senior Senator from Mississippi, there would be the best test for matters of this kind that we could possibly have. It is true that we have a representative form of government. However, the people cannot vote on every question which arises. But on a question as far-reaching and serious as this, a question so inflammatory and affecting to such a great extent the social lives of the people and their daily activities, their backgrounds, and their thinking, the people should have a voice. I do not know of a more fit subject for a plebiscite. Moreover, I submit that it is absolutely necessary. I believe that if we proceed under a system which fails to provide for a vote of the people on such a far-reaching and serious change, we shall be headed for most serious trouble in the District, a trouble which will perhaps spread to other areas and prejudice the minds of many calm, thinking people against the rights of the colored race to a fair share in the educational opportunities of the times.

I am quick to say that I favor giving the colored race a fair share of the educational opportunities of our time. However, I feel that I would be greatly derelict in my duty if I did not point a warning finger at the precedent which the Congress is asked to set. In the interest of the educational opportunities of the colored race, I plead with Members of this body to consider this question most solemnly and seriously, and invoke a plebiscite, a vote of the people. That is the only procedure by which this most serious question can be adequately dealt with or satisfactorily solved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] for himself and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON].

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his suggestion of the absence of a quorum for a moment? I should like to ask the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] some questions.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I gladly withhold it.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the senior Senator from Mississippi answer a few questions?

Mr. EASTLAND. Certainly, Mr. President. However, I do not want to have this counted as one of my speeches on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND] has the floor.

Mr. HOLLAND. The first question I should like to address to the senior Senator from Mississippi is this: Is it his understanding that the amendment which he and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] propose makes no change in the handling of legislation to provide for a policy of nonsegregation in the District, as compared with any other legislation, except that after everything else is accomplished to make the legislation effective, a referendum would be required among the people of the District of Columbia for their approval or disapproval?

Mr. EASTLAND. That is correct.

Mr. HOLLAND. Would those who participated in such a referendum be the same persons, qualified in the same way, as those who would participate in the election of members of the city council?

Mr. EASTLAND. That is correct; and the referendum and the election would be held at the same time.

Mr. HOLLAND. Would the referendum come up at the next regular election in the District?

Mr. EASTLAND. That is correct.

Mr. HOLLAND. Is the referendum proposed here identical in type with the referendum which would be required under the proposed act before the charter itself could be accepted?

Mr. EASTLAND. As I understand, it is.

Mr. HOLLAND. Is the referendum proposed in this amendment identical with the referendum which would be required in the case of a proposed bond issue in the District of Columbia?

Mr. EASTLAND. It is identical with that for a bond issue.

Mr. HOLLAND. And no further or additional requirement would be imposed in connection with legislation on this subject, as compared with any other type of general legislation for the District of Columbia?

Mr. EASTLAND. That is correct.

Mr. HOLLAND. Other than the referendum?

Mr. EASTLAND. That is correct.

Mr. HOLLAND. I should like to ask the Senator another question. Is it his understanding that under the amendment there would simply be added to the two matters as to which referenda already are required under the proposed measure—namely, the acceptance of the charter and the approval of any proposed bond election—a third matter, namely, a change from a segregated policy to a policy of nonsegregation?

Mr. EASTLAND. That is absolutely correct. The amendment simply provides that the people themselves shall decide that matter—the matter of the schools for their children; and in the plebiscite, both races will vote.

Mr. HOLLAND. I should like to ask another question. I was impressed by one of the arguments made by one of the distinguished Senators, to the effect that he felt it would be better to have this question decided in the beginning, before the proposed legislation became effective, rather than to have it present as a continuing trouble in every election thereafter.

Is the Senator from Mississippi in accord with that statement?

Mr. EASTLAND. No, I am not in accord with that statement. Conditions are changing from time to time and I think this is a matter for the people of the District of Columbia to handle. If the people of the District 10 years from now or 20 or 25 years from now have a desire to adopt a different policy from that which they desire at this time, they would have a right to do so.

Under the amendment, if the Commissioners decide to change the policy, the people shall vote on that matter at the next election. In other words the amendment simply provides that in such case the people shall have the right by plebiscite to cast their ballot.

Mr. HOLLAND. I thank the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, the committee in considering this bill endeavored not to go into the matter of segregation or nonsegregation. The issue presented here is that of giving the people of the District of Columbia suffrage for a certain purpose, under a home-rule bill. The question of segregation or nonsegregation is not affected in the District of Columbia one way or the other by this bill, as I view it. The junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] was quite right in stating that this was not a civil-rights measure. The status quo is not disturbed.

At the committee meeting, Clark Foreman and certain others appeared and proposed that in the proposed charter an FEPC amendment be included. They asked that nonsegregation provisions be included. At that time the committee decided to reject any FEPC amendment or any antisegregation provision. I stood with the committee then, I stand with the committee now. The issue on either side of the question has no pertinence in considering this bill.

So far as I am concerned, I do not think the rules about segregation in the schools are going to be changed. They will not be changed because of this bill. The ultimate decision would have to be submitted to Congress just as it is now.

Home rule and reorganization of the District are attempts for better government. To confuse these issues with the one of civil rights can only be done in an effort to create confusion as the civil-rights issue is not involved. In a city charter the council elected by the people will follow the dictates of the people. This is a fundamental principle of representative government. This proposal for a referendum on each issue involved violates that principle and I know of no city charter which singles out a particular issue of this kind. It is not done in the charter of Richmond, New Orleans, Oakland, or Baltimore.

The status quo on segregation is further protected in that if the council should pass a legislative recommendation changing any segregation law it would have to be submitted to the Congress and to the President before it could become effective. That is made clear under the terms of the act so that Congress has the same, if not a greater right in the matter than it does now. And, in addition, the council is not likely to take any action against segregation unless a preponderance of the people approve. My personal opinion is that no council representing the city at large is apt to disturb the present status on so vitriolic an issue.

We have a broad basis for the electorate in the District of Columbia, where only 22 percent of the residents are Negro. About the same percentage of the residents of Baltimore are Negroes, and segregation is in effect in Baltimore. I think a somewhat larger percentage of the population in Richmond, Va., is Negro, and Richmond has the same system of government that now is proposed for the District of Columbia, and there is no provision in its charter such as being proposed here.

The difficulty about getting into the subject of the pending amendment is that if we do so, we immediately stir up the idea of amendments on the other side of the question. That is, we would have FEPC amendments proposed and also antisegregation proposals would be presented. Accordingly, the bill does not deal with the matter one way or the other, and we cannot afford to go into the issue where it is not properly involved.

Of course, Mr. President, I suppose that, theoretically, in a government every issue should be voted on by the people. But under our system of representative government this cannot be done, and I know of no city charter anywhere in the United States which allows referenda on issues of this kind. The city council will be elected by about 250,000 domiciliary residents, plus the 100,000 residents of the District of Columbia from other parts of the Union and who are domiciled elsewhere. The only requirement is 1 year's residence. In such case they will have a right to participate. Accordingly, we shall have a very broad and intelligent electorate.

In that connection, Mr. President, I think the figures show that the education of the average person in the District of Columbia is somewhat higher than the education of the average person in most of the other cities in the United States.

Speaking for myself personally, I would not have a great deal of personal objection to such referenda, but it violates the principles and basis of this charter. It is contrary to the system of representative government contained in this proposal. I must speak for the committee, and the committee decided not to go into the matter one way or the other. I fear acceptance of this amendment would inspire FEPC amendments and other proposals which would defeat the bill.

There is one question I might ask the Senator from Mississippi: Ordinarily a referendum is held only on the petition of a certain number of voters. This amendment would make it mandatory that such a referendum be held, regardless of whether anyone was interested in the matter.

Mr. EASTLAND. Will the Senator please repeat the question?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I said that ordinarily a referendum is held only on the petition of a certain number of voters. For instance, there might be a small tennis court or some other minor matter in which the people generally were not interested. So I wonder whether the Senator from Mississippi has considered including in his amendment a provision for a petition by a certain number of voters. In all city charters I know of referendum is only granted upon petition of a percentage of voters.

Mr. EASTLAND. No such provision is now contained in the amendment. The amendment provides that when the Commissioners decide to take this step, the question shall be decided by the vote of the people. In other words, affirmative action by the city council will be necessary before the referendum will be held.

Mr. KEFAUVER. The question I was raising is that in the ordinary city charters in which referenda are provided for, a referendum is usually called for upon a petition signed by a certain number of voters. Of course, there conceivably might be considerable expense involved in having a referendum. I wonder whether the Senator from Mississippi has considered a provision which, after the other machinery had worked, would test the sentiment of the voters to see whether sufficient of the voters were interested in the subject to warrant having a referendum; in other words, an amendment to provide that only upon a petition by a certain percentage of the eligible voters in the District of Columbia, the Board of Election should call for an election and referendum.

Mr. EASTLAND. Such a provision might do; but I do not see how we could improve on what the amendment as we have submitted it provides. In other words, if the Commission decided to take such a step and if the people were faced with that condition, then they would determine it themselves.

Mr. President, let us be perfectly frank about this matter. I think most people will concede what is going to happen to the schools in the District of Columbia unless the people have a chance to pass on the question of segregation.

If we believe in democracy and in placing the destiny of the people in the hands of the sovereign people, then we are bound to favor this amendment, because it simply provides that the people shall vote on such a provision before the Commissioners shall place it in effect.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, in my honest opinion the rules about segregation will be less likely to be changed, or at least a change in them will be delayed longer, certainly, if the matter is left originally to a council selected by the people of the District of Columbia by the intelligent electorate of the District of Columbia, rather than the way the matter stands at present, for this would require affirmative action by the council and then submission to Congress before any change could be made.

Of course, under this bill Congress has the power—as it inherently has—to do anything about the situation in the District of Columbia that it wishes to do. That is expressly stated in section 404.

Mr. EASTLAND. The amendment certainly puts no stumbling block in the way of the exercise of the will of the people.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I think the Senator is distressed about the way the situation has been going in the District during the past year or the past few months. I believe there would be less likelihood of nonsegregation rules and laws being put into effect under the pending bill than there would be under the present situation. That is my honest judgment.

Mr. EASTLAND. I do not know about that.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Anyway, Mr. President, following the direction of the committee, I am not authorized to accept the amendment. The present position is that we did not want to go into it on one side or the other, that it was not germane, that it was not an issue to be considered. That is the position of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], for himself and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON].

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] for himself and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON].

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, there have been two amendments submitted, one Friday to lie on the table, which is not the one we are considering at this time, and an amendment which has been offered today for the first time by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] for himself and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON]. I want to speak briefly on the question, because it seems to me there is such a fundamental difference between the two amendments that I would have strongly to oppose one amendment but will support the other, the one which is now pending.

In the amendment which was offered by the two Senators last week, and which is on the desk of all Senators this morning, it was proposed, in effect, that whenever there was any suggestion made for a change in the matter of racial segregation in the District of Columbia, the question would first be submitted, by vote of the city council, to the board of elections, to be made the basis of a referendum election in the District; that the referendum should by no means be conclusive, but that the result should be reported to Congress, and any change in the matter should be made only upon the passing of appropriate legislation by the Congress, approved by the President.

Mr. President, I was strongly against that amendment, and I am glad the Senators have not offered it. I was against it because it took the subject entirely out of the field of home rule. It took it entirely away from the jurisdiction of either the people of the District of Columbia or their representatives, the District council to pass upon this subject matter, which, of course, is a vastly important one to the people of the District.

Mr. President, this morning the two Senators have offered the pending amendment, which is so completely different in form, not departing at all from the sound principle of home rule, that I thing it should be adopted. I think it will help the bill, and I think it will help the cause of clean politics in the District of Columbia after the bill is passed. I am one of those who are strongly in favor of the bill and want to see home rule prevail in the District as quickly as possible.

Under the amendment as it has been offered this morning, Mr. President, this will be the procedure, namely, that legislation which would depart from the traditional custom and law of segregation between the races in the District of Columbia would have to be passed in exactly the same way, through exactly the same machinery, and receive exactly the same consideration as would any other legislation relating to the District of Columbia, other than in the case of bond issues. As to this particular legislation, it would then be classified with bond issues in importance, in that, after having passed through all of the other machinery, it would then be submitted to a referendum vote of the qualified electors of the people in the District of Columbia.

That, in effect, would simply constitute a finding by the Congress of something which I think every Member of Congress knows already, that this is a vital subject matter in the District of Columbia and is entitled to have just as great importance in the consideration of the people of the District as are two other matters which are made the subject of necessary referenda by the bill. The first of those matters is, of course, whether the charter itself should be accepted. I invite the attention of the Presiding Officer and the other Senators to the fact that it is required under the provisions of the charter that before it can become effective, it must be submitted to a referendum vote of the qualified electors in the District of Columbia and must be approved as a result of that referendum vote.

I think that is sound democracy. The committee evidently thought it was sound democracy, because the committee included in the bill the specific provision that a referendum election must be had, and the charter must be approved by the qualified electors who are residents of the District of Columbia, before it can become effective.

The second matter which, in the judgment of the committee, and as shown by the provisions of the bill, was considered of such importance as to require the submission of the matter to referendum elections from time to time, was the question of whether or not the District should be bound by any proposed bond issue. A bond issue, of course, is an encumbrance against the future, an encumbrance against the properties, an encumbrance against the earning power of the residents of the District from that time forth until the bonds are paid, and under the wording of the bill the charter provides that a bond issue from time to time, whenever such issue is suggested, must pass through the ordinary channels of legislation, and then, having passed through those channels, must be submitted to the people themselves in a referendum election before it can be approved and become binding upon the people and the properties of the District of Columbia.

Mr. President, it is of course an arguable question as to whether the question of segregation or nonsegregation is a matter of as much importance as the adoption of the charter itself or as the approval from time to time of any bond issue. But I think it does not require any stultification on the part of any Member of the Senate to find, with his practical knowledge of all the discussion that has gone on, and the feeling that is involved, and considering all the property values involved, and the numerous other questions, that here is another subject matter which may properly be submitted to the people themselves in a referendum election, and that no rule of democracy whatever is violated by so doing, and that certainly no principle of home rule is violated by so doing, because the people themselves in the District of Columbia would be the final judges of the question of whether or not the new proposal would replace the old law, the old custom, of segregation in the District.

Mr. President, I am therefore going to vote for the amendment, and I hope other Senators will vote for it, because I think it will not only expedite the passage of the pending measure in the Senate, important as it is to the people of the District of Columbia and the people of the Nation, and I believe it will expedite its passage in the House of Representatives, but I think it will make simpler and sounder the politics in the District after that time.

I call to the attention of the Members of the Senate the fact that if, under the proposed charter, a situation is left whereby the members of the school board, for instance, can themselves make the rulings from year to year or from time to time as to whether segregation or nonsegregation shall apply in the schools, that issue will become the most important issue and the most violently debated issue in every election for the choice of the members of the school board of the District. I should not like to see that come about. I should like to see a situation under which people would be chosen to be members of the school board—a very important body, as it will be—on the basis of their interest in education, on the basis of their ability to promote a sound and improving school system in the District of Columbia. I should not like to see every issue clouded by the question as to what the attitude of any candidate on this point was.

Then, with reference to the nine members of the Council who will be elected by the qualified electors in the District, again I say that I think they will be better people, and more willingness to run will be found on the part of excellent, upstanding, and high-standing citizens, if that question is not to be a dominant question, to be injected in every race that is to be run, and if people will know from the very beginning that the only way by which a change can be accomplished in this important field is for the people themselves to say that they prefer to go out from under the old system and in under a new system which they themselves will have chosen.

Therefore, Mr. President, I think the adoption of the amendment will be wholesome, and I approve it. I call to the attention of the Members of the Senate the fact that, so far as departing from sound democracy or from home rule is concerned, many of the States and cities where it is claimed most progressive and most down-to-date democratic government prevails do have the referendum provided, under which not just in one or two matters but in all matters, or in many matters, by the simple petition of a small number of electors, a referendum may be required.

It is no departure from sound democracy, it is no departure from home rule. I think the only thing Congress would be concerned about would be if this were an amendment in which home rule itself were being diminished. I think that, to the contrary, this is an amendment which not only preserves home rule, but puts it in a place where home rule is really needed, that is, in a decision by the people themselves, the property owners, the citizens, who are given final power to pass on this troublesome question—and it will always be a troublesome question.

So I hope the amendment will be agreed to, and on behalf of those who are strongly supporting the pending measure, but who believe this amendment should be adopted, it should be clearly understood by all Senators present that the amendment which is now offered, and upon which we are about to vote, is by no means the amendment which was offered a few days ago and printed and laid on the table, but, on the contrary, that this amendment very carefully preserves the true, strict principles of home-rule government.

Mr. HENDRICKSON subsequently said: Mr. President, I had hoped last Friday to speak upon Senate bill 1527. I was deprived of that privilege by a subcommittee meeting which I was obliged to attend. At today's session the final vote on this measure came so suddenly that I withheld my formal remarks.

I therefore ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, ahead of the vote on the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], a statement which I have prepared on this subject.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, I shall not delay the Senate long but the issue before us is so much a part of our way of life past and present, that I cannot resist a sense of duty which tells me that to avoid a positive and vigorous declaration on the question, in the affirmative, would be to shirk my full responsibility. At the outset, Mr. President, I would like to express a word or two of commendation and tribute to our distinguished colleague, the junior Senator from Tennessee, for his very able generalship and his untiring and unselfish effort in the development of this issue, namely, S. 1527, for our consideration.

To me, his direction and guidance of the measure will always be an outstanding example of the manner in which real statesmen treat with a legislative problem fraught with many political difficulties. I will not attempt to review the long and arduous course which has too long delayed proper action on this basic principle of government under our democratic processes. This would only be to repeat portions of the eloquent presentation of my good friend from Tennessee, but I do want to say, Mr. President, that the present plight in which the people of the District of Columbia find themselves is no credit to the Congress of the United States. In five short months of service here I have witnessed a form of local government which, from my point of view, is not only cumbersome and archaic but also impracticable and unworkable, if not obsolete. To me it is amazing that the District of Columbia under its present structure of government has done as well as it has, but because it has gotten by after a fashion is no good reason to permit it to continue to be a blot upon the escutcheon of decent government.

As has been so well stated, this Capital, Mr. President, is now a world symbol of the democratic processes of government, and certainly if any city in America should be well managed that it might be the sterling example of local government for the rest of the world to follow, it is the city of Washington, D. C.

Why, Mr. President, when at the end of the combat of World War II our Government became a party to a quadripartite management of the great cities of Berlin and Vienna, I was shocked beyond belief, for I knew from my modest experience in local government that such an arrangement at the international level could never work, nor has it worked. Had the planners, Mr. President, of the occupation of these two great cities, used basic common sense, our distinguished generals would never have been confronted with many of the dilemmas which have faced them over the past 4 years.

But I have not arisen, Mr. President, to discuss the mistakes of Yalta, Tehran, and Potsdam; I only mention these fantastic designs for the direction, operation, and rehabilitation of two of the greatest local governments in the world, in contrast with the hodgepodge operations which take place here in our own Nation's Capital—and may I say that the contrast has some very similar aspects insofar as inefficiency and general confusion are concerned.

If we are to have the sort of sane, efficient, responsive local governments that American communities everywhere have been diligently striving for during the past quarter of a century, the effort must be in the direction of autonomy, not in the direction of division and discord—of duplication and overlapping and of waste. Nothing is so important to a well-managed municipality as local pride and, Mr. President, it is utterly impossible to have local pride when the citizen is virtually a foreigner to the local controls with nothing to say about them and without any semblance of power to correct them where they are violated. It may be that here in the District there are a few citizens who are able to get into the inner circle which gives them access to the present disinterested and absentee control, but Mr. President, this is not the type or style of citizenship which helps to build a greater and stronger democracy and it is this thing I call absentee control to which in the main I would address myself. We who are Members of the Congress under the present laws are the persons directly responsible for the fact that Washington, D. C., is not the exemplification of what the world's greatest capital should be and yet we escape that responsibility because the administration of too many of our hastily considered mandates affecting the District is in the hands of Commissioners quite separate and apart from us and our responsibilities. Let us at least be fair—we all know, particularly those of us who have had service on the District Committee, that the demands upon our time from our constituents alone are much too great to permit us to properly and adequately consider the needs of the District, and then to add to this, under our system of seniority, what happens? Well, for the most part, Mr. President, virtually all of the freshmen Members of the Congress, or at least I have found this so in the Senate, are assigned to the District Committee. They know virtually nothing of the District or its needs and, therefore, are at the mercy of local officials whose records may or may not coincide with those standards which the Members of Congress have known back home. But aside from confirmations in the Senate, the Members of Congress have no say over the administrative officials whatsoever.

Mr. President, these remarks are not intended as criticisms of anyone in the local government of the District of Columbia, but they certainly clearly illustrate the fact that the Congress is exercising the power which under present circumstances violates both legally and morally every aspect of the free processes of government as they were transmitted to us by the founding fathers.

Mr. President, the bill under consideration has had long and careful study—its counterpart in the Eightieth Congress under the able sponsorship of my distinguished colleague from New Jersey, JAMES C. AUCHINCLOSS, should have had favorable consideration a year ago so that there is little that I, as a new Member of this great body, can offer in any attempt to purvey its many admirable features and purposes. The distinguished Senator from Tennessee has done this beyond my limited ability to add or detract. This much I do want to say, in conclusion, Mr. President, and that, namely, that the debates of some 2 weeks ago on the sales-tax issue, standing alone, should be sufficient to convince anyone that the business of Congress is too much involved with the great national and international problems to allow for the time to properly regulate the affairs of a strictly local government from a national level. Under our conception of liberty and freedom, under our conception of well-ordered law, the situation which awaits solution at our hands is a shocking contradiction and when we, the Members of the Senate of the United States, stop to think that it has been foisted upon an intelligent population of now over 900,000 free men and women, I have an intuitive feeling that the simple decency and common honesty which is within every Member of this body will prompt us to say with unanimity that the people of the Nation's Capital are entitled to the same privileges and rights which we have enjoyed back in those great sovereign States of whose policies and principles we should be living symbols.

Let us here in the United States Senate show by our action on this measure that the two major parties mean what they say when they promise a common course of action on a specific measure.

So the amendment offered by Mr. EASTLAND for himself and Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of the Senator in charge of the bill: Am I correct in my understanding that the bill does not in any way touch upon the question of representation for the District of Columbia in the House of Representatives?

Mr. KEFAUVER. It does not in any way affect the representation in the House of Representatives or the attendance of delegates to the House of Representatives.

Mr. LODGE. Am I correct in my belief that the bill does not in any way affect the matter of Senators for the District of Columbia?

Mr. KEFAUVER. It does not.

Mr. LODGE. I thank the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

The bill (S. 1527) was passed.

PRICING PRACTICES—MORATORIUM

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1008, Calendar 284.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 1008) to provide a 2-year moratorium with respect to the application of certain antitrust laws to individual, good-faith delivered-price systems and freight-absorption practices.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to amendment. The clerk will state first the committee amendments.

The first amendment of the committee was, on page 1, after line 2, strike out:

That because of widespread uncertainty resulting from recent administrative and judicial constructions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, and the Clayton Act, as amended, the Congress hereby declares that it is the sound and traditional policy of the United States that contracts, combinations, conspiracies, or monopolistic practices in restraint of trade are inimical to the public interest in maintaining a free, private, competitive enterprise system; but that it has not been the intent of the Congress to deprive individual companies of the right to use delivered price systems or to absorb freight to meet competition in any or all markets, provided such activities are carried on independently and in good faith, and not through any combination or conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act, as amended.

SEC. 2. Until the expiration of two years after the enactment of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 11, after the amendment just above stated, to insert "That until July 1, 1950"; in line 16, after the word "independently", to strike out "use delivered price systems" and insert "quote and sell at delivered prices"; in line 17, after the word "freight", to strike out "to meet competition" and insert "for the purpose of engaging in competition in good faith"; in line 20, to change the section number from "3" to "2", and in line 22, after the word "on", to strike out "February 1, 1949", and insert "the date of approval of this act. The provisions of this act shall be operative with respect to any activities engaged in between the date of approval of this act and July 1, 1950, but shall not otherwise affect the enforcement of any order which was entered on or before the date of approval of this act."

The amendments were agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the committee amendments.

The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, just before the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] moved that this bill be taken up for consideration, I had had a conference with him and with several other Senators with respect to a substitute which I desire to offer for the entire bill, as presented by the committee. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], who is in charge of this measure, has been advised of the matter which I have in mind, as have also the Senator from Pennsylvania and the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN].

However, it happens that a special executive meeting of the subcommittee on the independent offices appropriations bill is called for 2 o'clock this afternoon. Probably it will require at least an hour, a witness being there now, waiting for the members of the committee.

It is my understanding from the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Maryland that the plan now is merely to make an explanatory statement regarding the bill, and that I shall be afforded an opportunity to present the substitute which I have discussed with those Senators.

Of course I am aware of the exigency which exists in this connection. I wonder whether it would be proper for me, with the agreement of the Senator from Pennsylvania, to make a unanimous-consent agreement that after the explanatory speech of the Senator from Maryland has been made, and before final action is taken, a quorum call will be had, so that I may return to the floor of the Senate and discuss the measure.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I had a brief discussion with the Senator from Wyoming not more than half an hour ago, and he presented to me the substitute which he intends to offer.

I told him that I should like some time to study his substitute, together with the explanation thereof. However, I have not yet had that time or that opportunity. I hope we may be able to get together and work out this matter to the satisfaction of all parties concerned.

At the present moment, all I can do is give assurance to the Senator from Wyoming that we certainly will have a quorum call so that he will have sufficient notice, after the remarks of the Senator from Maryland and the remarks of any other Senators who desire to express themselves in regard to the pending proposed legislation, before we reach a vote or any final understanding or agreement, so that the Senator from Wyoming may present his substitute and so that we may have some discussion of it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I am very grateful to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object——

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is nothing before the Senate to which objection can be made.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I withdraw my request, since the Senator from Pennsylvania has given me assurance that he will ask for a quorum call.

Mr. WHERRY. Before the final vote on the bill?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes.

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, American business and the buying public have few, if any, more vexing problems than that which is encompassed in the question of basing-point practices with which S. 1008, introduced by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS], and now under discussion, has to do.

Judicial interpretations or administrative rulings have put the stamp of disapproval upon certain business practices which had been adopted and generally regarded as legal and proper. Immediately it was suggested that new substantive legislation should be enacted to clarify permanently the important questions involved, especially with regard to selling-price practices.

But at once it was realized that the emergency requires that until a complete study and extensive hearings can be conducted with regard to all phases of the problem, with its many ramifications, a moratorium should be declared holding in abeyance the preexisting situation, prior to the decisions and rulings to which we have referred.

The sole purpose, therefore, of this problem is to confirm the right of individual companies to use certain pricing practices until July 1, 1950, when there is no conspiracy and when the practices are pursued for the purpose of engaging in competition in good faith.

Definitely, there is no permanent legislation involved in this enactment. Neither is there an attempt to commit the Congress to a certain course of action, or, indeed, to any action at all. I think it is well that there be a general understanding and acceptance before we go into the detailed discussions of the proposals. For that reason, I should like merely to read one sentence from the text of the pertinent paragraph. Reading from page 2 of the amended bill, line 11, the words are as follows:

> That until July 1, 1950, the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, and the Clayton Act, as amended, shall not be construed as depriving individual companies, in the absence of conspiracy or combination or other agreement in restraint of trade, of the right to independently quote and sell at delivered prices or to absorb freight for the purpose of engaging in competition in good faith in any and all markets.

At the outset it might be well to give a brief history of the consideration which this measure has received, and which the general subject of pricing practices and policies has been accorded during this session of the Congress and during the Eightieth Congress.

In June of last year, by Senate Resolution 241 of the Eightieth Congress, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was authorized and directed to conduct a full and complete inquiry into the existing legislation concerning Government policy affecting the activities of the Federal Trade Commission and the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the impact of these policies as interpreted by the Supreme Court, with particular relation to the basing-point or freight-equalization system of pricing, and the impact upon small and large business and upon the consumers of the United States of the maintenance or discontinuance of said system. The resolution also authorized inquiry into the status of business enterprise in the United States, to determine the extent and character of economic concentration, and the effect of such concentration, as well as the status of free competitive business enterprise as affected by transportation and Federal trade regulations.

A subcommittee composed of the senior Senator from Indiana, Mr. Capehart, chairman, the senior Senator from Maine, Mr. Brewster, the former Senator from New Jersey, Mr. Hawkes, the senior Senator from Colorado, Mr. Johnson, and the senior Senator from Connecticut, Mr. McMahon, conducted lengthy hearings, pursuant to committee action directing that under Senate Resolution 241 the first order of business should be a study of the impact on the national economy of the policies of the Federal Trade Commission, as interpreted by the Supreme Court with respect to delivered prices by industry, freight absorption by sellers, and the practice of sellers of absorbing freight to meet the competition of competitors located closer to the buyer.

The hearings held by this subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce developed a great mass of testimony; and a bill—S. 236 of the Eighty-first Congress—proposing permanent changes in the Robinson-Patman Act and the Clayton Act, was introduced, and went through several drafts. When it became apparent that the problem of drafting permanent legislation would require a substantial period of time, the Myers bill, S. 1008, was introduced. The pending proposal seeks to provide a moratorium period during which the right to use certain pricing practices would be preserved, and within which the Congress might further study the problem to determine what, if any, action it wished to take with regard to permanent legislation.

Senate bill 1008 was referred originally to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. However, the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], feeling that the subject matter of the bill was a matter within the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary, expressed that view to the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON]. The question of jurisdiction was considered by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which decided that both S. 1008 and S. 236 should be turned over to the Committee on the Judiciary; and this was done pursuant to Senate Resolution 76 of the Eighty-first Congress, approved February 28, 1949.

For the information of the Senate, I shall read the text of Senate Resolution 76, which is short. It is as follows:

> Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be discharged from further consideration of the bill (S. 236) to clarify and formulate a consistent and coordinated national policy with respect to transportation costs in interstate commerce; to strengthen the antitrust laws of the United States and to provide for their more effective enforcement; and to promote competition by permitting sellers to have access to distant markets, and the bill (S. 1008) to provide a 2-year moratorium with respect to the application of certain antitrust laws to individual, good-faith delivered price systems and freight-absorption practices, and that said bills be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.
> SEC. 2. That there shall be transmitted to the Committee on the Judiciary an interim report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on said bills and the same shall be printed as a Senate document.
> SEC. 3. It is understood the Committee on the Judiciary will give such prompt attention to the bills as will permit early consideration of the subject matter by the Senate.

In conformity with the wish of the Senate, as expressed in the third section of Senate Resolution 76, which I have just read, the Committee on the Judiciary proceeded very promptly to consideration of S. 1008. Hearings were held on March 30 and 31 and April 1. Witnesses who testified at these hearings included the senior Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. Myers, author and sponsor of the bill; the senior Senator from Colorado, Mr. Johnson, chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce; the Honorable Francis E. Walter, Representative in Congress from the State of Pennsylvania; Mr. Robert B. Dawkins, associate general counsel, Federal Trade Commission; Mr. William Simon, former general counsel to the Senate Subcommittee on Trade Policies, which conducted the original hearings under Senate Resolution 241 of the Eightieth Congress; Mr. Angus McDonald, assistant legislative secretary, National Farmers Union; Mr. George J. Burger, vice president in charge, Washington office, National Federation of Small Business; Mr. W. D. Johnson, vice president, national legislative representative, Order of Railway Conductors; Mr. Otis Brubaker, research director of the United Steel Workers of America, CIO, Pittsburgh, Pa., and various representatives of industry.

It was the aim of the Committee on the Judiciary to keep the hearings as short as possible, and to avoid repetition of testimony already given before the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Therefore, a substantial majority of the hearing time was given over to opponents of the bill.

In the Committee on the Judiciary, the subcommittee which conducted the hearings was composed of the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] chairman, the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], and the junior Senator from Maryland.

The action of the subcommittee in reporting the bill favorably to the full Committee on the Judiciary was unanimous. The vote by which the full Committee on the Judiciary reported the bill favorably to the Senate was 7 to 2.

Perhaps it would be well at this point to discuss the meaning of some of the terms generally used in describing the problem with which this bill is concerned.

One of these terms is basing-point pricing. There are, generally speaking, two kinds of basing-point pricing—a single-basing-point system and a multiple-basing-point system. In a single-basing-point system, all products of a given nature are priced to all buyers in all markets as though they all originated at a single shipping point, even though shipment may actually be made from that point or from any two or more different points. For some 50 years prior to 1924, a single-basing-point pricing system was employed in the steel industry, and this is the system commonly referred to as Pittsburgh plus. Under this system, steel was sold to buyers in all markets at f. o. b.-mill prices based upon the fiction that the point of origin for all shipments was Pittsburgh. Irrespective of the location of the mill from which he purchased, a buyer paid, under this system, the f. o. b. mill price; plus the rail freight cost from Pittsburgh to the point of delivery.

This practice was held illegal in the case of Corn Products Co. v. Federal Trade Commission (324 U. S. 726), decided in 1945. Senators should understand that the impropriety of the use of this practice has not been questioned in connection with the deliberations on Senate bill 1008, and the legality of this practice is not involved in any way in this bill. I have described this system simply to aid in a full understanding of the problem.

The difference between the single-basing-point system just described and a multiple-basing-point system is that the latter includes two or more points of origin from which transportation costs are computed, which points may or may not be the actual point of shipment in any particular case. Mills whose locations are used as basing points in determining transportation costs, under a multiple-basing-point system, are known as base mills, and other mills are known as nonbase mills. Customarily, under this system, there are substantially fewer price-basing points than there are points of production. Under this system the buyer pays the f. o. b. mill price plus the cost of rail transportation from the basing point which is closest to the point of delivery, whether the sale is made by a base mill or by a nonbase mill.

Under this system, therefore, the buyer might pay either the actual freight or some figure either more or less than the actual freight, depending on whether he bought a mill closer to the point of delivery or farther away from the point of delivery than the nearest basing point.

It will be seen that if every producing mill is a base mill, the buyer will never have to pay more than the actual freight; that is, he will never have to pay any phantom freight. For this reason, there are many who contend that the basing-point system does not embrace a practice where every mill is a base mill, because in such case only freight absorption is involved.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. O'CONOR. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to complete this one general explanation of terms, after which I shall be delighted to yield to my friend from Louisiana.

This contention is not universally recognized, and the difference of opinion on this point is a good illustration of how disagreements on this subject have resulted from different meanings being given the same words by different people.

As I have pointed out, under the multiple-basing-point system, it is possible for a buyer to make his purchase from a producer whose base mill is located farther from the point of delivery than is the base mill of some other producer; and in such a case the buyer pays the seller the f. o. b. mill price plus the freight from the closest base mill; that is, plus a sum which is less than the actual cost of transporting the commodity to the buyer. In such case the seller is said to absorb a part of the cost of transportation; and this practice is what is generally known as "freight absorption."

I have already given one instance of "phantom freight"; namely, the case in which the base mill is farther from the point of delivery than is the producing mill, so that the buyer pays the seller the f. o. b. mill price plus a sum greater than the actual cost of transportation involved in the transaction. Another instance of "phantom freight" arises under a practice which has sometimes been used of charging a delivered cost based upon all-rail freight rates, even though the commodity might have been shipped by water or truck at a lower rate. In this case also it will be seen that the buyer pays on account of transportation costs a sum greater than the actual transportation costs. This excess also is known as "phantom freight." In point of fact any form of additional charge to the buyer on account of transportation which represents more than the actual cost of transportation in connection with the transaction may properly be referred to as "phantom freight."

The basing-point pricing to which I have just referred has been used primarily in heavy goods industries. A somewhat similar practice used in many industries encompasses the sale of commodities at a delivered price uniform to all buyers, or at a delivered price uniform to all buyers in a given area or zone, without regard to the variation of actual cost of transportation to any individual buyer. When the delivered price is uniform to all buyers throughout the country the practice is generally known as a national uniform delivered price. Such a pricing system is used, for instance, in the sale of candy bars and chewing gum, cigarettes, many nationally advertised products, and many thousands of other products for which the seller charges the same price to buyers in all sections of the country without regard to the point of delivery. The same "pricing practice," if I may use the term in this connection, is used by the Post Office Department in charging for the carriage of mail. In the case of first-class mail the cost of transportation is "averaged" among all users. In the case of third-class mail—parcel post—the cost of transportation is "averaged" among users differentiated by zones. It can be seen that under either kind of "averaging" of transportation costs, whether on a uniform national basis or by zones or areas, in some cases the actual cost of transportation will exceed the imputed average; and in such a case the seller is absorbing freight. In other cases the actual cost of transportation will be less than the imputed average, and in this case the seller can be said to be charging "phantom freight."

Under the zone-pricing system, a seller may have only two zones, or he may have three or four zones, or a much larger number. The theory behind such a pricing system remains one of averaging the cost of transportation to all customers within each zone.

That will, perhaps, suffice as a discussion of terms.

I have referred previously to the Corn Products case. In that case, the Supreme Court held that, when the requisite injury to competition was shown, the charging of phantom freight constituted an illegal price discrimination under the Clayton Act. Let me emphasize that there was no confusion about the Corn Products decision. What the Court held was clear, and it was clear how the Court's holding applied.

Let me say again, at that point, that the decision in the Corn Products case has not been challenged in connection with deliberations on the Myers bill now before the Senate, and is not an issue in any way in connection with this bill.

However, in another case—the so-called Cement Institute case (333 U. S. 683), decided in April 1948—the Supreme Court did hand down a decision which has been the basis of substantial dispute as to its meaning, with resulting widespread confusion in business and industry.

The respondents in the Cement Institute case were charged with conspiring, and were found by the Federal Trade Commission to have conspired, to fix prices by means of the use of a multiple-basing-point system. They were also found to have conspired to discriminate in price, in violation of the Clayton Act, by receiving varying mill net returns. These findings were upheld by the Supreme Court, which thus found their practices illegal. Up to that point, there is no argument whatsoever with the decision; rather, there is universal agreement that all such practices are and must be illegal. The difficulties arose because of the dicta in the Cement case decision.

The doctrine of that case was that the conspired use of any pricing practice is illegal. It is, of course, elementary that any practice, even though legal per se, may become illegal when adopted by conspiracy. Thus, the doctrine in the Cement Institute case, holding that the practice of freight absorption, adopted by conspiracy, was illegal, did not encompass a holding that freight absorption itself was illegal. But the language used by the Supreme Court, by way of dicta, resulted in great confusion as to the right of a seller to absorb freight, when not accompanied by conspiracy. I repeat that last statement, for emphasis. The language used by the Supreme Court, by way of dicta, resulted in great confusion as to the right of a seller to absorb freight, when not accompanied by conspiracy. The Federal Trade Commission—or at least, certain members of that Commission—have contended that what others regarded as dicta in the Cement Institute case was actually doctrine, and did amount to a judicial holding that the absorption of freight is per se illegal, at least when it results in any price discrimination.

The confusion which thus arose was considerably accelerated, immediately following the Supreme Court's decision in the Cement Institute case, when the circuit court of appeals at Chicago, in the Rigid Steel Conduit case (168 F. 2d 175), used this language:

> In the light of that opinion (referring to the Cement Institute case) we cannot say that the Commission was wrong in concluding that the individual use of the basing point method as here used does not constitute an unfair method of competition.

It is noteworthy that the individual use of the pricing practice involved in the Rigid Steel Conduit case included its use by two sellers, as to whom the Federal Trade Commission had expressly dismissed charges of conspiracy, thus adjudicating that these sellers were not using the practice pursuant to a conspiracy with other sellers.

In the light of the language used by the Federal court the case was appealed, and a few weeks ago by a decision of 4 to 4 the Supreme Court affirmed the decision of the circuit court of appeals in the Rigid Steel Conduit case. Because of the tie vote no opinion was rendered, and no additional light was thrown on the subject. The urgency of congressional action on the subject was thereby increased.

It is obvious, of course, that if sellers may not absorb freight in the sale of commodities, the only alternative is to sell exclusively at f. o. b. mill or f. o. b. factory prices. A very thorough discussion of the effect on the national economy of required f. o. b. mill selling is contained in the interim report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which is Senate Document No. 27 of the Eighty-first Congress; and I shall not take up the time of the Senate to go into that question here.

The same interim report discusses in great detail the activities of the Federal Trade Commission in connection with this whole question of pricing practices. I think it wise to avoid a discussion of that question also, at this time, since it is primarily involved here, and had best be discussed in connection with proposed permanent legislation in this field.

The bill now before the Senate is a simple moratorium proposal. We are not presently concerned with how confusion arose or who has been responsible, and in what degree. We are concerned with the fact that confusion exists, and our effort here is to take action which will stay the devastating effect of that confusion upon business and industry, upon both buyer and seller, for a sufficient period to permit the Congress to consider the whole question adequately and take such action as, in the sound discretion of the Congress, may be justified, by way of permanent legislation, if any legislation at all is to be enacted.

The committee considered very carefully the question of the constitutionality of the proposed legislation, and concluded that it was constitutional. A memorandum on this point, concurred in by three experts of the Federal Law Section, Legislative Reference Service, Library of Congress, and three members of the professional staff of the Committee on the Judiciary, is printed in the committee report on this bill. The bill is offered as a temporary amendment to existing law. As such an amendment, it should be recognized by the courts as a part of the body of the law to which the judicial branch must give effect.

This is a reasonable construction of the language of the proposed statute, just as reasonable, in every way, as a construction which would make the proposed statute unconstitutional; and it must be obvious that the statute, if enacted, must be given, and can be given, only the construction intended by the Congress, if that intendment is clear. Furthermore, it is a well-recognized axiom of statutory construction that as between two possible interpretations, both reasonable, one of which would render the statute unconstitutional and the other of which would render it constitutional, the constitutional interpretation must be given, because the Congress may be presumed to have intended a constitutional act.

One of the first questions the committee had to decide was whether, in this bill, it was desired to make any permanent change in the law. The committee answered this question in the negative. As I have pointed out before, the enactment of the proposed legislation will be, in effect, an amendment to existing law; but it will be a temporary amendment.

Testimony before the committee made it perfectly clear that the question of interpretation of the language contained in section 1 of the bill, as introduced, was highly controversial. Not only was there considerable divergence of opinion with respect to the effect of the language used but there was also argument, pro and con, over the propriety of an attempt by one Congress to express and clarify the intent of a previous Congress, and over the question of how such an attempt could take legislative effect.

The better view, we believe, is that the only way such an attempt could be effective would be through amending existing legislation. To put it in another way, Congress cannot constitutionally amend a law nunc pro tunc. We do not mean to say that Congress cannot enact a statute which will have some retroactive effect; but Congress cannot overrule the Supreme Court with regard to what a statute means. Congress can only change the statute, so that after Congress has acted, the law means something different from what the Supreme Court had said it meant before.

Both proponents and opponents of the bill, in testifying before the Committee on the Judiciary, stated that the objective in connection with the proposed moratorium was only to permit freedom of action, with respect to pricing practices not arrived at by conspiracy or collusion, during the period of the moratorium; and these witnesses agreed that the question of permanent changes in the law should be deferred until Congress enacted permanent legislation on the subject. In order to achieve this objective, the committee decided to eliminate all of section 1, and the committee amendment accomplishes this.

The expiration date of the moratorium provided in this bill is July 1, 1950. This allows more than a year within which the Congress may consider and act upon the question of permanent legislation in this field.

I should point out that the first use of this date was not in the Senate committee. The House Committee on the Judiciary, in acting on a companion bill, amended it so as to make the expiration date July 1, 1950; and the Senate committee felt this was a wise choice. There was some sentiment in the committee for making the period of the moratorium even shorter; but there was no substantial argument for making it any longer. If the Congress is going to enact permanent legislation on the subject of pricing practices, it can be done before the expiration date of the moratorium provided for in the bill.

I believe it may be well to point out that enactment of the bill does not commit the Congress to any particular future course of action. By passing the bill, Congress does not promise to enact permanent legislation. At the same time, we believe that dealing with the problem in this way certainly amounts to a moral commitment by the Congress to consider the whole problem very carefully, and to reach a definite determination as to whether permanent legislation is needed, and if so, what form it should take. It is the intention of the Committee on the Judiciary to go forward promptly with its consideration of this problem, and I want to assure the Senate that the question will not go by default.

Committee amendments to the bill include substitution of the phrase "quote and sell at delivered prices" for the phrase "use delivered-price systems" which appeared in the bill as introduced. The purpose of this change is to eliminate any possible contention that the Congress intends to legalize, even during the period of the moratorium, the systematic use of basing-point pricing, which proponents of the bill have testified is not an objective. Criticism has been directed at the use of the phrase "quote and sell at delivered prices" on the grounds that the term "delivered prices" is not defined in the legislation. It is equally true that the phrase "delivered-price systems" was not defined in the bill as originally introduced; but the use of the word "systems" did carry some connotation which, at least in the minds of some witnesses, indicated that the bill was intended to legalize pricing systems rather than to permit certain pricing practices. The committee amendments negative any possibility that the bill will be so construed, because all reference to pricing systems has been eliminated, even in the title to the bill, under the committee amendments.

The committee, in its amendments, has also substituted the phrase "for the purpose of engaging in competition in good faith," in place of the phrase "to meet competition." There can be no question that the language used by the committee provides a more flexible standard for independent action, during the moratorium period, than the phrase used in the bill as introduced. In this respect, the committee amendment does change existing law. But, as I have already pointed out, the change is a temporary one. In the opinion of the committee, it is a wise change.

As interpreted in many instances by the Federal Trade Commission, and by the courts, the standard embodied in the phrase "to meet competition" amounts virtually to a floor under prices. But, as it was pointed out to the committee during hearings on the bill, real competition may involve not merely meeting the price of a competitor, but actually selling at a lower price. The established American custom of passing on savings and economies to the consumer by means of price reductions has been a very substantial contributing factor in creating, in this country, the highest standard of living the world has even seen. Since one objective of the bill is to permit, during the period of the moratorium, a sufficient freedom of action so that operations under the moratorium will give the Congress an opportunity to judge the desirability of permanent changes in the law, the committee deemed it desirable to make this change.

There will be no quarrel, we feel, with the committee's decision to fix the beginning of the moratorium period as the date of approval of this act, instead of beginning the moratorium at some arbitrary date. This insures that there will be nothing retroactive in the provisions of the act, and insures also that there will be no period of hiatus between the date of approval of the act and the applicability of its provisions.

One very difficult problem which the committee faced in considering this legislation was to provide for freedom of action, during the period of the moratorium, even for those companies against whom orders have been issued, while at the same time avoiding any possible interpretation of the act as an attempt by the Congress to extend a blanket pardon for any violations of such orders which may have occurred before the date of approval of the act. This has been accomplished by the language of section 2 of the bill, as amended by the committee. Let me read that language, for the information of the Senate:

SEC. 2. Nothing herein contained shall affect any proceeding pending in any Federal court of the United States on the date of approval of this act. The provisions of this act shall be operative with respect to any activities engaged in between the date of approval of this act and July 1, 1950, but shall not otherwise affect the enforcement of any order which was entered on or before the date of approval of this act.

Under that language, any company will have the right to quote and sell at delivered prices, or to absorb freight, while engaging in competition in good faith, during the period of the moratorium. But the language offers no inducement to seek modification of orders already issued, not any basis for petitions to reopen cases which have been already adjudicated. The language which I have just read makes it perfectly clear that the moratorium applies to any activities engaged in after the date of approval of the act and before July 1, 1950, but that the provisions of the act are otherwise inapplicable with respect to enforcement of orders entered before the date of approval of the act.

That point is so important that I want to state it in another way, to be sure there is no possibility of misunderstanding. This language says to business and industry: "What you do during the period of this moratorium, with respect to pricing practices, is governed by the provisions of this act; but this act does not affect anything which you may have done before the date of its approval and it will not affect anything you may do after July 1, 1950."

During the time the bill was in committee, the Rigid Steel Conduit case, to which I have previously referred, was pending in the Supreme Court. As a matter of chronology—and this is a rather interesting coincidence—the Supreme Court decision in the Rigid Steel Conduit case was handed down just 1 hour after the Judiciary Committee voted to report the bill favorably to the Senate. Furthermore, in its decision—which was an affirmance of the circuit court by a split vote of 4 to 4, with Mr. Justice Jackson abstaining—the Supreme Court rendered no opinion to clarify the situation. On the contrary, after the recent action of the Supreme Court confusion still existed.

Thus, the action of the Supreme Court in the Rigid Steel Conduit case appears to lend force to the arguments for congressional consideration of this whole problem and for a congressional determination with respect to permanent legislation. This action of the Supreme Court also, of course, increases the urgency of the need for temporary legislation, such as here proposed, which is intended to safeguard the interests both of industry and consumer until the Congress determines on its future course of action.

In conclusion let me seek to dipsel any idea that may have arisen in the minds of some persons in regard to this proposed moratorium, namely, that it is a proposal solely in the interest of what is known as big business. With all the sincerity I can command I declare that this is not the case. Representatives of many, many smaller industrial and business organizations are just as heartily in favor of it as are the leaders of the large companies and others who have stated their views to the committee. The issue at stake is one that affects vitally our entire economy. The present confusion of thought has resulted in much uncertainty over the entire problem of transportation and transportation charges. I am very strongly of the conviction that S. 1008, in the form in which it is reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, should be promptly enacted by the Congress.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'CONOR. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. From a reading of this very short bill, the so-called basing point bill, it seems to me that its purpose is to set aside certain antitrust legislation for another period of 2 years: but I am wondering just what the meaning of the bill is. I have received several communications to the effect that it would lend encouragement to the formation of monopolies and would react against the interests of small business, and so forth.

I find in the statement of the minority views, signed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], certain proposed amendments to the bill. One in particular reads as follows:

Provided, however, That nothing herein shall legalize any act or practice now unlawful because of bad faith, discrimination, coercion, oppression, or a tendency to injure, suppress, or eliminate competition.

I ask the Senator from Maryland whether this proposed amendment was considered by the committee, and if so, why there was objection to including it in the bill? It seems to me to be a reasonable safeguard which would meet the criticism of the bill as now written.

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, in answer to the question of the Senator from Vermont, I will say that the proposed amendment was not considered by the committee. It was not submitted for consideration. We had no knowledge of the proposal until we saw it in the minority views. I assume that it will be fully discussed by the senior Senator from North Daktoa [Mr. LANGER], the author, but it has not been considered by the subcommittee or by the full committee.

Mr. AIKEN. Would the Senator construe this amendment as being a fair amendment, and one which would quiet the fears of certain groups that the bill might be used to extend monopoly and to squeeze out small business?

Mr. O'CONOR. Let me say in answer to the Senator that we employed as clear language as we could find to prevent any conspiratorial act. We made it a condition that no act would be legalized or approved which might be committed in furtherance of a corrupt combination or collusive action. We made it particularly plain, by amending the bill as originally introduced, that this moratorium would exist with reference to certain practices only when certain conditions obtained: First, that the individual seller would have to act independently; second, that he would have to act in good faith; and, third, that he would have to act in the absence of any conspiracy, and would be required to act only for the purpose of engaging in competition.

Mr. AIKEN. Then, is it the understanding and interpretation of the Senator from Maryland that the language now employed in the bill is intended to accomplish the same purpose as the amendment I have read, and which is incorporated in the minority views of the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. O'CONOR. I do not want to comment on the proposal, which I have not heard discussed. I shall listen to the discussion with a great deal of interest. As I previously stated, the amendment was not submitted to the committee.

Mr. AIKEN. Let me read the amendment once more:

Provided, however, That nothing herein shall legalize any act or practice now unlawful because of bad faith, discrimination, coercion, oppression, or a tendency to injure, suppress, or eliminate competition.

Am I correct in understanding that the Senator from Maryland believes that the bill is designed to accomplish the same purpose?

Mr. O'CONOR. Certainly. As I previously stated, it is not the intention by this bill to legalize any conspiracy.

Mr. AIKEN. I thank the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'CONOR. I yield.

Mr. MYERS. I point out to the Senator from Vermont that the Attorney General addressed a letter to the Judiciary Committee on this particular bill. The letter appears on pages 93 and 94 of the hearings. It was signed by Peter Campbell Brown, Acting Assistant to the Attorney General.

The Department of Justice have this to say in that letter:

In view of the nature of this bill we see no occasion for discussion here on the merits of these cases.

They were speaking of the several cases, the Cement case and the Steel Conduit case.

I read further from the letter:

Section 2 of the bill would provide as follows:

"Until the expiration of 2 years after the enactment of this act, the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, and the Clayton Act, as amended, shall not be construed as depriving individual companies, in the absence of conspiracy or combination or other agreement in restraint of trade, of the right to independently use delivered price systems or to absorb freight to meet competition in any and all markets."

It is the view of this Department that this section would be limited strictly to individual pricing practices, the use of a delivered price (i. e. individual setting of a given price without extra charge for cost of transportation), and to the adoption of price variations in conformance to the Robinson-Patman Act for purposes of meeting competition. It would not appear to affect existing law with respect to (1) combinations or conspiracies, express or implied, (2) price or pricing practices involving freight absorption, charges for "phantom freight" or any other pricing practices which have the effect of discriminating between buyers in violation of the Robinson-Patman Act, or (3) the use of a "basing point"—which involves neither the practice of charging a basic price plus transportation, nor a basic price with transportation charges prepaid, but the hybrid practice of imposing an arbitrary charge, in addition to the basic price, not related to actual cost of transportation. Nor would it give a blessing to any pricing practice, whether consisting of a delivered price, f. o. b. price, or any other kind of price which is designed to, or has the effect of, restraining trade or creating a monopoly contrary to the antitrust laws.

This interpretation is borne out by the express exclusion of conspiracies from the protection of the measure, the failure to give approval to discriminatory pricing practices and the failure to mention "basing point" practices as such, despite the fact that this term is a common one which has a well-understood meaning quite different from the more general term "delivered price" used in the bill.

So construed, and without expressing any views as to its necessity or desirability, the Department of Justice would have no serious objection to a reasonable moratorium long enough to give the Supreme Court opportunity to clarify the situation in the Rigid Steel case, and the Congress opportunity to examine the decision in that case. Accordingly, if Congress feels some legislation must be passed, the Department would not oppose a moratorium until July 1, 1950.

Mr. President, I think the Department of Justice have accurately described the purposes of the bill and have accurately described the practices which do not come within the provisions of the bill—either monopolistic practices or pricing practices which this bill does not embrace, and which certainly would not be made legal as a result of the passage of the bill.

Mr. AIKEN. I understand that the Senator from Pennsylvania believes, from a reading of the letter of the Attorney General, that the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota relates to language already in the bill. Does the Senator interpret the language of the bill as being adequate and sufficient to prevent the further extension of monopoly and the placing of small business in a disadvantageous position?

Mr. MYERS. I assure the Senator from Vermont that I do, because I am as firm an advocate of the strengthening of the antitrust laws and the laws to prevent monopoly as is any other Member of this body.

I believe the enactment of the pending measure is vitally necessary for the protection of many of our industries, and to overcome the confusion which has resulted, particularly from the steel-conduit case. I believe the bill, if enacted, will in nowise weaken the antitrust laws or give to the corporations of America any power to expand or bring about greater monopolistic practices.

As the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] has so well said, I believe the bill has the one purpose which has been stated, and that we have written into the bill safeguards so that neither the antitrust laws nor the Clayton Act nor the Federal Trade Commission Act will be weakened in any respect. The only purpose of the bill is to overcome the confusion which everyone realizes has resulted, first, from the cement case, but more particularly from the steel-conduit case.

Mr. AIKEN. I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania for giving his interpretation of the language of the bill.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, this bill, introduced by the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS], is entirely misnamed. It should be entitled "A law to set aside the antitrust statutes of the United States of America" or "A law to add more confusion to the interpretation of the antitrust statutes than presently exists."

Every Senator knows that whenever the big business interests have lost a case in the Supreme Court, attempts are promptly made to have the Congress rush to their defense.

Only 2 or 3 years ago the Supreme Court held that in the southeastern part of the United States there was a monopoly by insurance companies. Then, overnight, before the Senate committee could take action, the big business insurance companies of the United States went to work pleading for a new law to protect them in the profits they were taking out of the pockets of the people of the United States. All of us know what the result was; it was that those companies got what they were after.

One of the first speeches I heard made on this floor was delivered by the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], when finally the big pipe companies were brought into court, along with 18 other pipe companies or oil companies that were sued a few days later. Two days before Christmas they sneaked into a court here in the city of Washington; and, although only three companies had been sued, a summons and complaints were handed to the other 18 companies at 10 o'clock in the morning; and at 2 o'clock in the afternoon they pled nolo contendere; and the people of America were robbed of over $1,000,000,000 by those oil companies. The distinguished Senator from Iowa tried repeatedly to get remedial legislation enacted by the Congress, but was unable to do so.

Again, Mr. President, I remember one day when the railroads came into this Chamber, so to speak. When the western railroads were built, it was agreed that every odd section of land within 10 miles of the railroad track, on either side of it, should be owned by the railroads, and in exchange they would haul the freight of the United States Government for nothing. The railroads got the land, some of it being worth millions upon millions and even billions of dollars. Some of it the railroads have not put on the market to this day. Some of it is some of the richest mineral land in the West. However, when the Second World War came along, the railroads reneged on their agreement, and finally the Congress provided that the railroads would be paid for hauling Government freight 50 percent of what they charged private persons for hauling freight. They came before the Senate, and although a few of us did all we could to defeat them, they had the law wiped out. They said, "It will result in the railroads having cheaper freight rates." Instead of that, the freight rates have continually gone up, until today they are the highest they have ever been in the history of the country.

Again, Mr. President, the Senate last year witnessed a spectacular succession of events in connection with tidelands oil in the State of California. A group of millionaires went out into the ocean and dug for oil. Finally the Attorney General brought a lawsuit, which became known as the California case. He won the case. The Supreme Court of the United States said, "The oil belongs to all the common people of the United States." Overnight, another measure was presented before the Judiciary Committee. Had it not been for the veto of the measure by the President, the common people would have been robbed, not of millions of dollars but of billions of dollars. But President Truman vetoed it.

So we see that whenever the people win in the Supreme Court, a bill is introduced almost overnight to do away with the benefits gained by the people as the result of the lawsuit, and the tribute the little fellow pays to the big fellow is not interrupted. The big fellow can go on robbing the common people in every possible way imaginable.

Regardless of whether Democrats or Republicans were in power, the antitrust statutes have not been enforced. The Sherman antitrust law was enacted in 1891, 58 years ago. I challenge any Member of the Senate to name one person ever to have been put in jail within the entire period of 58 years for violating the Sherman antitrust law. Of course, if a veteran comes home to his family, and if the family is hungry and he steals a few loaves of bread, he is promptly put in jail. If he steals enough to constitute grand larceny, he goes to the penitentiary. But conversely, if three or four big corporations conspire to raise the price of milk, or of bread, or of other necessities of life, they are not put in jail. They are even honored. They are placed at the head of departments of the Government. Only 3 days ago I noted a headline in the Fargo Forum, "British leader dies in mill city." The news item was dated Minneapolis, Minn., and read as follows:

MINNEAPOLIS.—Viscount Leverhulme, 61, world industrialist, died in a hospital here last night.

With him were his wife, Lady Leverhulme, their daughter, Jill Lee-Morris, 18, and Charles Luckman, president of Lever Bros. Co.

The viscount was stricken shortly after boarding a train at Banff, Alberta, Monday night. His condition was such that he was taken to St. Mary's Hospital when the train arrived in Minneapolis.

The viscount's Unilever Co. controls 516 firms dealing in soap, oils, and margarines in 40 countries. The empire includes Lever Bros. in the United States.

It will be remembered that in the Eightieth Congress, under the leadership of the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], an effort was made to repeal the tax on oleomargarine, and to regulate its sale. For a few days it seemed that the bill might pass. What happened? Lever Bros. Co.—the same company as the one named in the news item I just read—together with an investment company and another concern, obtained a corner on oleomargarine. The people of the country had expected to be able to get oleo at a cheap rate in competition with butter. But, within a few days after the cornering of the market, the price of oleo rose 28 cents a pound. The price was 23 cents a pound when the bill was introduced. A few days later it had risen to 51 cents a pound—an increase of 28 cents a pound. But the Charles Luckman named in the news item is the same man whom President Truman appointed as head of the Fats and Oils Division, only a few short months ago. So I repeat, instead of putting the big fellows in jail, they are appointed as the heads of Government departments. The leaders of our country know that. I have before me another article that came from Frankfort, Germany, a few days ago. It says, "Monopolistic sales banned in Germany." In Germany, when the military is concerned, the very practices are wiped out that are permitted here. The article says:

FRANKFORT, GERMANY.—Monopolistic sales contracts were banned in the British and American zones of Germany today.

The order was issued by the joint export-import agency (JEIA), which controls international trade in the bizonal area. John Logan, JEIA director general, said the policy is based on the principles of the Habana charter for an international trade organization, drawn up by the United Nations March 24, and on the bizonal antimonopoly laws.

Logan said there would be no approval for contracts which "tend to restrain fair competition, limit access to markets, foster monopolistic controls, which may have harmful effects on the expansion of trade, or otherwise interfere with the free and normal development of German exports."

Mr. President, we come to what was said in a report to the Senate in relation to independent business. It is entitled "Independent Business—Its Struggle for Survival," and is a report on problems facing American small business, written by the chairman of the special committee to study problems of American small business. Commencing on page 5, the report is in complete disagreement with the pending bill, S. 1008.

Mr. President, I want to show what the effect of this bill would be. First of all, until Tom Clark became the Attorney General, no honest-to-God attempt to enforce either the Clayton Act or the Sherman Antitrust Act had been made. Under the Republicans we heard of the trust buster from St. Paul, Minn.—Frank Kellogg. But he broke up no trust. It was a joke. Then there were some so-called trust busters under Democratic administrations. They were just as bad, if not worse. It was stated that they did not have sufficient money under the appropriation of between two and three million dollars. The Senate appropriated millions of dollars so that the Department of Justice would have sufficient money to hire enough lawyers and investigators to proceed really to enforce the antitrust statutes.

I repeat, it was not until Attorney General Tom Clark took office that we saw for the first time an honest attempt made to put men in jail for violating the antitrust laws. Of course, they could be put in jail for only 1 year. The Sherman Antitrust Act provides that no one can be placed in the penitentiary for such violation, but he can be fined not more than $5,000. But, in any event, we had the refreshing experience in the United States of seeing a man who was honestly trying to put some of those law violators in jail where they belonged.

Referring now to the four cases which I have mentioned, the insurance legislation, oil legislation, tidelands legislation, and railroad legislation, and adding to them the cement case and the conduit case, we have had interpretations by the Supreme Court of the United States which has taken many years to get. I would add one more, namely, the divorcement of the motion-picture producers and the motion-picture theater owners—those who actually produce the pictures and those who own the theaters.

I started that fight, myself, in North Dakota, in 1933. Fifteen years later I got a decision finally divorcing the owners of the theaters from the producers. But, mark you, Mr. President, no one went to jail in that connection. The children and their fathers and mothers who attended the moving-picture theaters continued to be robbed for 15 long years. The case was finally decided after Tom Clark personally argued it before the Supreme Court of the United States. Even then no one went to jail in connection with it. Violators of the law can rob the people of millions of dollars before they can be fined $5,000. That is the limit they have to pay for a violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act.

Whenever such cases have come before the Supreme Court of the United States, immediately bills have been introduced, just as in the instant case, in order to cause greater confusion. In that connection, consider the bill which is now before us. The minority views show that Senate bill 1008 introduces new terms and phrases into the antitrust laws, without providing any definitions or standards for their interpretation, and thus confuses the law instead of clarifying it.

It is the old, old game, Mr. President—speaking in new terms and new phrases so that lawyers all over the country can have another Roman holiday.

The antitrust statutes represent an established body of law which the Congress framed with infinite pains in choosing exact words to convey congressional intent. Through many years of judicial interpretation, these words have come to have definite meanings which are understood by both business and the legal profession. It is like throwing sand into a gear box to force new words and phrases into this carefully developed body of law without giving a clue to their intended meaning. Specifically, the pending bill contains four new undefined phrases; and these four new phrases, Mr. President, mean many millions of dollars for lawyers all over America, who will be hired to appear before the various courts of the Nation, including courts of appeal and, finally, the Supreme Court of the United States, so that 8 or 9 years will go by before we find out the meaning of some of the words and phrases. For example, there is in the bill the term "engaging in competition." That term has never been defined by the United States Supreme Court. What does it mean? Does it mean competition between trucks and trains? Does it means competition between airplanes and trains? Does it mean competition between mixed trains and solid freight trains?

There is another new expression used in the bill, namely, "absorb freight." Another case is "in any and all markets." Another one is "delivered prices."

As I said before, these four terms are worth hundreds of millions of dollars to the lawyers of the United States of America until they are defined.

None of these phrases has ever been tested in the courts. It is uncertain whether "engaging in competition" will be held to include (a) only the behavior characteristic of businessmen in a competitive industry, (b) also the tactics of enterprises that seek more business by discriminations that destroy their small competitors, or (c) also the limited rivalry for orders that exists under price formulas which produce identical delivered prices. That the latter constitutes "engaging in competition" has been the fundamental and persistent defense of many of the respondents in the Federal Trade Commission's price-fixing cases.

There it is, Mr. President, just in that one term "engaging in competition" there are three different definitions, any one of which is going to delay finding out the meaning of the statute for years and years to come.

I wish to call attention to another fact. When the war came along Congress passed a statute which provided that so long as the war lasted antitrust suits would not be brought. So the movie case which I mentioned, which we started in 1933, was held up all during the war. During the war an antitrust suit could not be brought against an oil company because it was said we needed oil for defense, and the companies were so busy producing oil that it would be unheard of to bring an antitrust suit to harass or annoy them in any way. So we should let them go ahead and gouge the people all they could. It was more important to win the war than it was to recover a few hundred million or a billion dollars. So that they went merrily on their way, Mr. President, happy in gouging the people all during the years of the war.

I repeat, we are going to hear a lot of this one term. It is going to be in the district Federal courts and in the appellate courts and in the Supreme Court.

"Engaging in competition" will be held to include (a) only the behavior characteristic of businessmen in a competitive industry, (b) also the tactics of enterprises that seek more business by discriminations that destroy their small competitors, or (c) also the limited rivalry for orders that exists under price formulas which produce identical delivered prices.

Mr. President, what does "absorb freight" mean? I marveled at the nimbleness of the distinguished Senator from Maryland as he explained Senate bill 1008. Elihu Root could not have done a better job than did the Senator from Maryland in taking this bill up and explaining it. Portions of it he glossed over, simply saying he was not going to refer to the Federal Trade Commission. In another place he said that he stood for freedom of action by the Federal Trade Commission, when, as a matter of fact, the Federal Trade Commission all during the war had been handicapped by the fact that they could not bring any action of any major import. They even held up some of the cases in which we have gotten decisions since, like the cement case, and some of the other cases, because of the fact that during the war they could not prosecute, and now that the war is over they will not get many more lawyers to assist them. We have an economy wave, and it is said they have too much help already. So that for 6 or 7 years cases which should have been tried during all this period have piled up, and we find they have not enough lawyers to go ahead and try them now, with the result, of course, that big business keeps on rooking the little fellow.

In Senate bill 1008 the distinguished Senator from Maryland, my very warm friend, uses the term "absorb freight." It is uncertain. He does not know, and no living man on earth can tell, whether "absorbing freight" will be interpreted as reducing a delivered price by an amount not greater than the freight cost actually incurred upon the particular shipment, or by an amount not greater than the applicable rail freight charge even when goods are shipped more cheaply by water or truck, or by an amount not greater than the freight cost from the seller's plant nearest the point of delivery even if shipment is made from a more remote point, or by an amount not greater than the freight cost from the seller's most remote plant even if shipment is made from a nearer plant.

Mr. President, I make the prophecy that when one of these monopolists goes to a lawyer and says to that lawyer "I am going to hire you. We want you to give us a definition of what the two words 'absorb freight' mean," the lawyer will say, "Well, it means one of four things."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may have the floor when the Senate meets tomorrow. I wish at this time to yield to the distinguished junior Senator from Oregon who desires to speak on the identical subject I have been discussing.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I am in a situation where I need to catch a plane, and I should like to make my remarks in support of the position taken by the Senator from North Dakota in opposition to the bill at this time, if it meets with the approval of the distinguished acting majority leader.

Mr. MYERS. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WITHERS in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Oregon may proceed.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to discuss Senate bill 1008, which proposes a 2-year moratorium on the Supreme Court's decision on the basing-point issue, and in the interest of continuity I shall not yield until I complete my formal remarks. Then I shall be very glad to yield for questions.

I am perfectly aware of the fact that I am speaking for the RECORD this afternoon, but I think it of utmost importance that a record be made in opposition to the majority report on the pending bill.

Mr. President, if I were to give my address this afternoon a title I would headline it "The Attempts to Legalize the Basing-Point System: A Case Study in Propaganda."

Mr. President, this Congress was sent here to represent all the people of the United States. It is exposed to constant pressure from special interests, large and small; but amid these pressures its function is to find the broad public interest, not to lend its power to private groups for the accomplishment of private purposes. For this reason, the more adroit pressure groups frequently try to hide their concern over a public issue and to dissemble the extent to which they stand to gain or lose through our decision. They devise specious arguments, and use Charlie McCarthys to make the arguments. Every Member of the Congress is familiar with these tactics, and I think every Member of the Congress resents them. We need to know the way in which a bill affects the particular interests of particular groups, because that knowledge is necessary before we can make an intelligent determination of where the public interest lies. We welcome the spokesman for a private group if he represents it openly and candidly. In our effort to protect ourselves against those who wear a false face while they offer us advice, we have required that lobbyists be registered. We do not want to decide political questions in the dark.

For nearly a year an effort has been under way to persuade the Congress to change the antimonopoly laws in such a way as to legalize the pricing practice of the steel industry, the cement industry, and various other monopolistic industries. The first goal of those who wanted the change was immediate amendment of the basic statutes. When they found they probably could not succeed in this aim, they decided to ask instead for a broad temporary moratorium on the enforcement of the statutes, apparently in the hope that if the Congress should enact such a moratorium its decision could be regarded as a promissory note to be paid off later by permanent legislation. When a sweeping moratorium ran into difficulties, the aim became still more modest—enactment of a limited moratorium now, but still with an implied promise of more legislation later.

From the beginning, a few powerful interests have been behind the drive for these different types of legislation. The same interests are behind it now. If they had come out openly to say what they wanted and why they wanted it, I might disagree with them, but I would not criticize them. From the beginning, however, they have adopted devious tactics, calculated to entrap the unwary. They have used pressure tactics to intimidate opponents of their program. They have tried to misrepresent the issues; and they have tried, in part successfully, to deceive Members of Congress. They have provided a classic illustration of an objectionable lobby at its worst. It is high time this lobby should be exposed. I propose to expose it.

Even if there were no direct evidence showing who is behind the drive to amend the law, it would be reasonable to suppose that the groups that want the Federal Trade Commission stopped from continuing its proceedings against basing-point systems are the group that use basing-point systems and are subject to those proceedings. The cases that have created the furor have been the Cement case, the Conduit case, the Glucose cases, and the belated revival of the Pittsburgh-plus case. We all know that there is a serious monopoly problem in the United States, and that the industries which have furnished the respondents in these cases lie near the heart of it. The cement companies have notoriously submitted identical bids to the Federal Government, refusing, on great cement contracts like those for Bonneville Dam, to make the slightest price concession below what they charge in the sale of a few bags to a contractor who is building a driveway or a sidewalk. In spite of the wide distribution of raw materials and producing capacity and of the relatively small size of cement plants, in 1945 the 10 largest cement companies controlled over 60 percent of the industry's capacity; and through mergers they have increased their control since that date. The largest single cement company is a subsidiary of United States Steel Corp.

The principal respondent in the Commission's conduit case was the General Electric Co., and among the other respondents were Republic Steel Corp. and Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. The respondent in the Pittsburgh-plus case was the United States Steel Corp. This company, together with the other major producers of steel, is also a respondent in the case now pending before the Federal Trade Commission, in which the Commission charges that a basing-point system has been used to fix steel prices. In the glucose cases the principal respondent was Corn Products Refining Co.

In this series of cases the Commission has attacked the citadel of monopolistic power in the United States. Except in the glucose cases, the interests of major steel companies have been involved. It is not surprising—indeed, it accords with all political experience—that these companies should have decided to strike back. It is they who launched, and it is they who have master-minded the campaign to change the American laws against monopoly.

The strategy of the campaign was worked out quickly but not instantaneously; and it has left a clear trail in the trade press. On April 28, 1948, less than 48 hours after the Supreme Court decided the cement case, the New York Journal of Commerce carried an interview with Irving S. Olds, of United States Steel Corp. Mr. Olds said that the United States Steel subsidiary, Universal Atlas Cement Co., would comply with the Court's order. Ignoring the pendency of the case in the Federal Trade Commission, in which it is charged that the steel companies are using the basing-point system to fix prices, he said that the basing-point system as used in steel did not result in any agreement among producers to use it, that any producer was free to use it or drop it, and that it was generally used as the most convenient way to sell steel. He took comfort in the fact that the Congress had not acted favorably upon past proposals to outlaw the multiple basing-point system, an inaction which he interpreted as a refusal; and he said that industry was faced with two alternatives, either to seek remedial legislation or to educate the Supreme Court.

It did not take the steel industry long to decide how to go about trying to recover the lost ground. Some differences of opinion were visible in the trade press in May. Apparently one view favored standing pat until the Supreme Court decided that the steel makers must change their practices. As late as May 27, Iron Age reported that the steel industry would not abandon its existing pricing practices unless forced to do so by a Supreme Court decision, but Steel Trade Press reported on June 6 that many steel officials believed the only solution was legislation supporting the present method of pricing steel. On the same day, the New York Times reported that it was a foregone conclusion in the trade that an attempt would be made to plug for legislation which would make the basing-point-sales method legal. It is evident that about the beginning of June the steel industry decided to seek an amendment to the law, and that its purpose in doing so was to retain the full right to sell on a basing-point system as it had always done and not merely to clarify the law or to be sure of the right to absorb freight.

Although the idea of new legislation was born in the steel industry, the big companies of the industry were careful to avoid acknowledging their brain child. When hearings were held by the Capehart committee, no witnesses appeared from United States Steel Corp.; indeed, the company's only participation in the hearings was a reply by letter to a question addressed to it by the Senator from Indiana. Bethlehem Steel Co. abstained from appearing at the hearing, although it did send a similar letter in reply to a similar question. Republic Steel Corp., which was involved in both the Conduit case and the pending Steel case, did not participate in the hearings, but its chief engineer presented testimony contending that the continuous casting process developed partly by that company would not bring any great reduction in the costs of steel making. National Steel Co. and Jones & Laughlin, which were doing all they could behind the scenes to get the law amended, took no part in the hearings, except that National replied by letter to a question from the Capehart committee. The steel manufacturers were represented only by representatives of Inland Steel, Pittsburgh Steel, Continental Steel, and Sheffield Steel, and by an official of the Concrete Reinforcing Steel Institute, who apparently offered themselves as spokesmen for small business.

This same shyness has also characterized the other large companies against which the Federal Trade Commission has brought basing-point cases. In the cement industry the five companies offered no testimony, and witnesses came only from Marquette, the sixth largest, and from Hercules and Nazareth, two smaller concerns. In the glucose industry, Corn Products Refining Co. kept aloof from the hearings, while Staley Manufacturing Co. and Penick & Ford, smaller concerns, supplied testimony. General Electric Co. and Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co., which were involved in the Conduit case, did not testify.

While the large concerns were avoiding public appearance, the hearings abounded in testimony from small steel fabricators and small users and distributors of cement.

This way of handling the matter reflected a carefully considered policy on the part of the large companies, far removed from indifference or resignation. Behind the scenes, they were vigorously pressing their customers to testify in favor of the legislation they wanted. Reports of such requests have come from enough different quarters to make it clear that a systematic campaign was conducted by the steel companies to drum up witnesses among the users of steel. Most of this effort appears to have been carried on by word of mouth, but nevertheless it has left clear traces. On September 13 the magazine Steel said that salesmen of National Steel Co. were suggesting to customers that they ask the Congress to take definite action to legalize basing-point selling. On September 21 the New York Times said that the president of Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. had predicted a big drive on Congress to legalize the multiple basing-point system of selling steel, in which he expected thousands of steel consumers affected by the change to bring pressure upon Congress for legislation. In July, Ben Moreell, president of Jones & Laughlin, mailed a letter to every customer. The letter carried the title "The Right to Compete" and, after representing the company's pricing methods as being merely an effort to compete by absorbing freight and representing the Federal Trade Commission's basing-point cases as having made it unlawful to absorb transportation charges in order to meet competition, ended with this passage:

> We urge our customers and all others interested in the welfare of the country to give serious consideration to this matter. We believe that all will conclude, as we have, that prompt action by the Congress is essential if we are to continue to have the vigorous competition in this country which has been so fundamental to our national development.

Mr. Moreell's letter made no reference to the fact that the steel industry's pricing system which he described as competitive is now under attack in a Federal Trade Commission proceeding as a part of a price-fixing conspiracy.

In August, E. T. Weir, of National Steel Co., likewise addressed a letter to all customers. According to the New York Journal of Commerce, he described the effect of the cement decision as one which would localize steel production and fabrication in a few districts. He went on to say:

> There is no time to be lost. The quicker action is taken, the quicker relief can be secured. A great deal of work must be done. Since the type of Congress we had during the 1930's refused to do what the Supreme Court has done, there is every reason to expect that the type of Congress to be elected in November will act to reverse the court.

Under the conditions prevailing in the latter half of 1948, suggestions such as those contained in these letters had the practical effect of commands. Steel fabricators in most lines were trying desperately to operate their businesses in the face of a severe shortage of their basic raw material, steel. Producers of steel were rationing their customers and refusing to accept new customers. Black market prices were far above open market prices. Under these circumstances, to reduce or delay the supply of steel to any customer had the same effect as fining him the profits upon some portion of his business, and to discontinue his supply of steel might amount to a sentence of business death. It was inevitable that as soon as the steel manufacturers took a strong position with their critically situated customers in favor of basing-point legislation, many of their customers would echo the same sentiments, and customers who disagreed would at least avoid public mention of the fact. To a lesser degree the same situation prevailed in the cement industry.

The intimidating effect of the steel industry's attitudes and activities broke into the public press upon at least one occasion. On October 14 the New York Times reported statements at the National Hardware Show in which hardware manufacturers said that the steel industry's abandonment of the basing-point system had reduced the costs of raw materials and enabled them to pass price reductions on to their customers. According to the news report, hardware makers requested that their names be kept confidential for fear that, if identified, they might be disciplined by their suppliers for daring to speak their minds.

The passage from the news report reads as follows:

> Citing a typical price reduction resulting from f. o. b. mill pricing, a garden-tool maker reported that these savings had enabled him to reduce his prices 1 percent. However, he feared reporting the reduction because of possible loss of steel allocations. In other products, even larger price reductions were named by exhibitors who did not want their companies mentioned because of fear of trade reprisals.

With this background, it is no wonder that the businessmen who appeared before the Capehart committee were almost unanimously in favor of legislation that would draw the teeth of the Federal Trade Commission.

The propagandists for the basing-point system did not neglect labor groups. Their efforts to cajole and frighten their employees were described before a Senate committee on February 18 by Otis Brubaker, director of research, United Steelworkers, CIO, in the following language:

> This propaganda offensive has also extended into the mills and factories, as well as in the public press and radio. Some managements have carried this campaign directly to their employees through their collective-bargaining agencies. A number of our own local unions have received appeals from their employers for support in this controversy. Some few smaller and less experienced locals have acquiesced to these requests either out of respect for their employers or because they have been sold a bill of goods and have joined their companies in fearing the effects of price competition on their particular companies. Most of our locals, however, apprised the union's international officers of these requests and asked for advice in answering them, or asked if the international had investigated the matter and had taken a position. Some of these management statements to the local unions in their plants have threatened plant shut-downs, lay-offs, and curtailment of operations. Is it any wonder that many local union members have been concerned?

Propaganda was not the only means used to persuade the business community. The abandonment of basing-point selling by the steel industry last July was manipulated in such a way as to make the change objectionable to consumers and thereby strengthen the demand for legislation. This point was widely noted in the business press. On July 8, the Wall Street Journal quoted an unnamed executive of a large manufacturing concern as having said:

> The pressure on Congress to pass legislation to make freight absorption a legal business practice probably will be terrific as the result of U. S. Steel's action. For a lot of steel users, it means higher prices. Many toes will be pinched. Apparently steel officials felt that they couldn't win their price case before the courts so they are using this means to take it to the people.

On the same day a signed article in the New York Journal of Commerce pointed out that—

> Ending the basing-point system during a sellers' market, as at present, will have sharply different results from what would be expected if the move were forced during a buyers' market. * * * Congress, it is believed, will consider legalizing the basing-point system when it sees inflationary effects upon prices of the change to an f. o. b. basis.

Three days later the same reporter said that the steel and cement leaders were taking the position that—

> Congress did not pay attention to us, but they will listen to thirty or forty thousand steel or cement consumers when they realize that their votes are at stake.

Talk about intimidation by lobbies! One has only to read the history of this story of propaganda to see at its worst lobbying as practiced on Members of Congress.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. For what purpose?

Mr. MYERS. For a question.

Mr. MORSE. I am very sorry, but to catch my plane I must complete my formal remarks expeditiously. If I have any time left, I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MYERS. I hope the Senator will have a little time left.

Mr. MORSE. I hope so. If not, I shall be glad to debate with the Senator from Pennsylvania tomorrow.

On August 17 Iron Age remarked:

> The last word on the subject has not yet been heard. A number of steel consumers have already yelped loudly upon feeling the impact of f. o. b. selling. But the loudest squawk of all will come from steel consumers who, after studying the matter, decide that their method of selling their own finished product is illegal. Maybe the steel industry is counting on their protest to bring congressional action to legalize the basing-point method of selling.

The change to f. o. b. sales was made objectionable in several ways. First, although the base prices for steel had been set high enough to allow for the costs of freight absorption, these prices were not adjusted downward when freight absorption was abandoned. Instead, the full amount of the freight formerly absorbed was added to the price. Thus, prices were raised. Shortly after the change, base prices were substantially increased and though the industry did not represent this increase as due to f. o. b. mill selling, many consumers of steel could be counted on to connect the two changes.

Second, the steel companies used the shift to f. o. b. mill selling as an excuse to complete their withdrawal from the territory in which they had formerly absorbed freight. In a sellers' market, with more demand than they could satisfy, they had found it unprofitable to absorb freight to make distant sales when they could sell nearby without absorbing freight, and the cost of the practice had been increased by higher freight rates. For this reason, steel companies had been steadily withdrawing from those markets in which freight was absorbed. A report by the Senate Committee on Small Business last February showed that by 1947, before the industry contemplated selling f. o. b. mill, this withdrawal had gone so far as to reduce the supply of steel to many parts of the country well below what it had been in 1940. The committee's report makes it clear that an effort to avoid absorbing freight was the principal influence in this change. But every such withdrawal brought protests from consumers who, when cut off by their former suppliers, could not persuade other producers to supply them; and in consequence a certain amount of freight absorption still existed in the early part of 1948. The change to f. o. b. mill selling gave the steel industry a chance to kill two birds with one stone. First, it got rid of the rest of its costly freight absorption and shifted the blame to the Federal Trade Commission; and, second, it converted the buyers who suffered from the change into an army of zealous supporters of the modification of the law which the steel industry desired.

Otis Brubaker, of the United Steelworkers, CIO, has forcefully described the character of the steel industry's shift to f. o. b. mill pricing. Testifying before a Senate committee on February 13, he said:

> It must be remembered that the steel industry was not forced to change over to an f. o. b. system last August. There was no order outstanding against it or even pending. The industry was at that time only well started on what may well be long-drawn-out Commission and Court proceedings. At worst, the industry might have eventually been ordered years later by the Commission and the Court to cease and desist from using the basing-point system any longer. Had the industry really believed that the law as it stood and as it was interpreted by the Commission and Court required f. o. b. pricing, it would certainly have agreed to cease its costly case before the Federal Trade Commission. Instead it has kept that case going while it attempted to cut the ground out from under that "Court" by getting the law changed. * * *

Had the industry been willing to make a fair switch to f. o. b., it would have reduced its former base prices to exclude the average net freight absorption factor (about $1 per ton). This would have meant lower base prices to all consumers, which would have resulted in lower delivered prices to consumers closer to mills and higher delivered prices to those farther away. Some consumers would have gained; others would have lost. Instead, in this instance, the industry simply announced that its old base prices, which included average freight absorption, were now the new f. o. b. prices. This meant that no one would gain and many would lose through higher steel costs. Then as though it wished to make this lesson deeply clear, the industry, within a period of from 1 to 2 weeks, raised steel prices by more than $10 per ton, the largest general increase made effective in many years. All of the consumers paid more, and most blamed it on the Federal Trade Commission. No buyers gained as they should have and so none appeared to champion the FTC. We do not contend that the industry deliberately planned such a result, though this has been asserted. We do say, however, that the industry must have been aware that this would be the result, and, even had it intended this result, it could not have planned a course better designed to alienate support for the Federal Trade Commission's attempts to curb the abuses of basing-point pricing systems generally.

In September of last year, the public-relations firm of Ketchum, Inc., a subsidiary of Ketchum, MacLeod & Grove, of Pittsburgh, was employed by anonymous persons at a compensation of at least $11,000 a month plus expenses to get the law amended. It undertook to organize a so-called National Competitive Committee with chapters in Pittsburgh, Houston, Cincinnati, Dayton, Cleveland, Philadelphia, and Tulsa, and with other chapters contemplated in 17 other cities. At first this organization refrained from registering under the Lobbying Act, but finally did so on November 26. Executives of the public-relations firm replied to newspaper inquiries as to who supplied the money for the campaign by saying that they were not at liberty to give the names. Iron Age subsequently announced that the program was being financed by membership dues which ranged from $100 to $1,000 per member.

In December, eight employees were traveling around the country organizing local chapters. On December 22 the manager of the campaign informed a reporter that his public-relations company was organized to perform such jobs as delivering to a client a ready-made Nation-wide grass-roots organization. The reporter's account of the interview contained this passage:

I asked him if it wasn't true that the new fashion in lobbying was to avoid anything so conspicuous as a Washington office and contact Members of Congress through local figures in their communities. He said it was.

This lobbying effort was one of the best organized, one of the most heavily financed, and one of the most adroitly deceptive that has ever been addressed to the Congress of the United States. It puffed up the desire of a few monopolists so that they seemed to be the voice of American business. It deceived a large part of business and a goodly number of the Members of the Congress as to the nature of the law, the decisions of the courts, and the policy of the Federal Trade Commission. It almost succeeded in modifying the basic monopoly statutes of the United States so that they could no longer assure competition. This is an impressive achievement. The anonymous donors who supplied $11,000 a month plus expenses got their money's worth until the existence of the lobby was disclosed by newspapermen last December. From that time to this moment, excitement about changing the law has been dying away, misrepresentations have been less successful, and many of the advocates of legislation have been in retreat from direct to more roundabout ways of accomplishing their purposes.

The propaganda about the basing-point issue has not been confined to sending stooges before a Senate committee and intimidating the opposition to the steel industry's program. It has included misstatement of the facts and the issues through every channel by which the opinion of the public could be influenced. The Federal Trade Commission's proceedings have been misrepresented. The Federal Trade Commission's policy has been misrepresented. The effect of the proposed legislation upon the pricing practices of the basing-point industries has been misrepresented.

I realize, Mr. President, that these are strong statements. I shall attempt to show that they are true ones.

The Federal Trade Commission's prosecutions and policies have been consistently represented as efforts to prevent businessmen from absorbing freight or from selling at delivered prices, with the objective of forcing all business to adopt a rigid practice of selling products f. o. b. mill. Through these representations, an effort has been made to persuade every producer in the United States, large or small, who is not selling f. o. b. mill already, that the Commission is trying to force him to change his pricing practices. The propaganda has implied that the Commission's attitude does not grow out of an effort to preserve competition, but is dogmatically applied even where the effect would be to reduce competition.

What are the facts? Four of the Commission's basing-point cases have reached the Supreme Court. The Commission has decided a few other cases in which the findings about basing-point systems or zone-price systems were an important part of the decision. In all these cases but two, the Commission has charged and found that the basing-point or zone-pricing system was used as a part of the means by which a price-fixing conspiracy was brought about. In the two remaining cases, it has charged and found that price discriminations not justified by differences in cost have injured competition. In the only case in which the conspiracy issue has reached the Supreme Court, that of the Cement Institute, the Court sustained the decision and complimented the Commission upon the comprehensive and expert nature of its findings. In the two price-discrimination cases that have reached the Supreme Court, the Commission's findings were also sustained. In the basing-point conspiracy cases that have reached the circuit courts, the Commission's findings of conspiracy were sustained.

In some of the conspiracy cases, notably the cement case, there was a second count which charged that the prices which were fixed by conspiracy were also illegally discriminatory; and where this charge reached the courts, it, too, was sustained. In every such case the Commission found, and in every case reviewed the court sustained the finding, that the discrimination in price injured competition, and that it could not be justified by differences in cost, and that it was not made in good faith to meet the prices of a competitor. Discussion of these cases in the propaganda for amendment of the law has been carried on as though the findings of the Commission had never been made and had never been sustained by the courts, or as though they were obviously untrue; but no reasons have been advanced to date that would support an assumption that the Commission and the courts were not right. Such efforts to shake the confidence of the public and the Congress in our machinery for law enforcement are propaganda at its most irresponsible level.

Misrepresentation of the Commission's cases has reached its pinnacle with reference to the conduit case. Here the Commission's complaint had two counts. The first count charged a conspiracy on the part of the Rigid Steel Conduit Association and its members, including such concerns as General Electric Co., Youngstown Sheet and Tube Co., and Republic Steel Corp., to fix the prices of the steel pipe which is used in buildings as a container for electric wiring. This conspiracy was richly proved by many kinds of evidence. For example, the Commission's findings included a letter from a trade association official to a member of the industry who had filed a low price, which read in part:

The filing of price lists, if these lists happen to be uniform, will assure all uniform quotations made on any inquiry, whether from the Government or a private individual, but with the matter of the delivery charges left up in the air as it has been, there is room for differences. I am therefore calling for the filing of these delivery charge schedules.

The importance attached by the members of the industry to the maintenance of uniform delivery charges is indicated by an association rate bulletin which is also quoted in the Commission's findings. The foreword to this bulletin said:

The freight rates listed herein are to be used to ascertain delivery charges in figuring f. o. b. destination prices to all points in the United States and their possessions. Where the freight rates shown are from Pittsburgh, Pa., the Pittsburgh basing prices must be used. If the freight rates shown are from Chicago or Evanston, Ill., the Chicago or Evanston basing prices must be used.

In 1937 the man who prepared the freight-rate bulletins suggested that henceforward the freight schedules be published and distributed by the individual companies. The Commission found that this change in form did not make any change in fact and that the bulletins were still intended for use as a common factor in pricing conduit. In November 1939, a representative of one of the companies wrote to his associates:

Mark this interesting language:

Please note this memorandum and destroy.

Mr. President, I believe in working out in the open, in public. When we run onto bits of evidence such as this, I believe we have a right thoroughly to consider the motivation behind such attempts as this propaganda represents to have Congress pass legislation of this type, which in my judgment will do serious injury to small business in the United States and will greatly intensify the monopolistic grip of a few businesses on the throat of the American free enterprise system.

Note this language:

Please note this memorandum and destroy. There was a meeting of the various manufacturers of conduit in New York on November 16 at which all major manufacturers were represented except Triangle. * * * the dropping of the Chicago base was briefly discussed but it was decided not to do anything about it for the time being because of the possibility of investigation.

"Nice business," Mr. President—but reprehensible business, and a clear indication of what the monopolies are up to, so far as our competitive system is concerned. Are they attempting to improve or maintain the competitive system? Not at all, Mr. President; they are trying to strangle it. That is the intention of the monopolies, with the result that the small-business men today are being strangled by the monopolies in America.

The Commission's findings also include a summary of the efforts of members of the industry to maintain uniform prices by using uniform consignment contracts which gave the manufacturers control over distributors' prices, by agreeing to discipline distributors who did not observe the approved prices, by fixing discounts, and by investigating the prices at which particular sales were made. Considered as a whole, the Commission's findings are conclusive that the members of the industry were determined to fix prices and that they were trying to carry on their price fixing so that it would appear to be merely individual action.

The second count of the Commission's case was an effort to penetrate the camouflage which the industry had erected about its conspiracy. This count was clearly designed to enable the Commission to order the companies to quit observing the pricing formulas which they had developed to a point at which their conspiracy might be expected to work automatically. It was obviously intended to prevent the companies from continuing to do what they did before on the pretense that what had begun as conspiracy was now merely individual action. Its plain purpose was to let the Commission issue an order which could be enforced without the necessity of bringing a new charge of conspiracy and so, in effect, being required to try the original case all over again. This count charged that each of the members of the industry used the industry's basing-point system knowing that all the others were using it and knowing that the inevitable effect of this concurrent use would be to eliminate price competition and that in fact this industry-wide use of the system did eliminate price competition. Under this second count a conspiracy was not charged, but the facts set forth were enough to justify a charge of conspiracy. Finding that the count was sustained, the Commission used it as a basis for an order which forbade use of the basing-point method of pricing and of pricing practices akin to it by any respondent. As the Commission said:

For the purpose or with the effect of systematically matching delivered-price quotations with other of said respondents or producing the equivalent of such matched delivered prices through systematic discriminations in the mill nets received on sales to different purchasers.

Lawyers may reasonably find it difficult to distinguish between the Commission's charge in count 2 and its conspiracy charge in count 1. They may reasonably wonder whether the Commission really needed count 2 in order to sustain an order which forbids each member of an industry from doing his part in the maintenance of an industry-wide price conspiracy that was automatically maintained by formula. There is no need for us to make up our minds here whether we think the Commission's handling of the case was wise or unwise. What is clear is that the Commission's eye was fixed upon conspiracies and the ways to prevent them and that its order against the systematic matching of delivered price quotations throughout the industry had nothing to do with the practices of the many competitive industries which have not spent a quarter of a century developing a price-fixing formula. Even if this were not clear in the findings and order themselves, it would have become clear in the subsequent statements which the Commission has made public. On October 12 the Commission released a statement of policy which it had addressed to its staff. This statement discusses the Conduit case in the following language:

In the Rigid Steel Conduit case the Commission found, and the circuit court agreed, that adherence to an industry-wide basing point formula, with the knowledge that other concerns are adhering to it also, constitutes in itself a violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act by the individual adhering companies when price competition is thereby eliminated. It would have been possible to describe this state of facts as a price conspiracy on the principle that, when a number of enterprises follow a parallel course of action in the knowledge and contemplation of the fact that all are acting alike, they have, in effect, formed an agreement. Instead of phrasing its charge in this way, the Commission chose to rely on the obvious fact that the economic effect of identical prices achieved through conscious parallel action is the same as that of similar prices achieved through overt collusion, and for this reason the Commission treated the conscious parallelism of action as violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Should the Supreme Court sustain the Commission's view, the effect will be to simplify proof in basing-point cases, but to expose to proceedings under the Federal Trade Commission Act only courses of action which might be regarded as collusive or destructive of price competition.

Again, on February 11, 1949, in reply to questions submitted by the Senator from Colorado, Commissioner Davis, with the concurrence of Commissioners Ferguson and Ayres, made clear the Commission's position about the Conduit case in the following language:

Both the Cement Institute and the Rigid Steel Conduit cases were basically conspiracy cases, and the precedents established in those cases are, in my opinion, applicable only in conspiracy situations. * * * In my opinion, the second count of the Conduit case is not susceptible of application except in conspiracy situation. The legal theory of that count charges a practice followed by each of a group of sellers with knowledge by each that the same practice is being followed by all other members of the group, as well as with knowledge of the results of the common use of the practice, and that those results are in fact the restraint and suppression of competition. The facts of record in the Conduit case were such that the Commission might have elected to include Spang-Chalfant and Clifton Conduit in the order under the first count. Both had knowledge (or such knowledge could reasonably be imputed to them) of the origin and purpose of the practices adopted and followed by them. Since I view the second count of the Conduit case as, in practical effect, equivalent to a conspiracy, although the word "conspiracy" is not used, I see nothing inconsistent in dismissing the first count as to these two respondents and including them in the order under the second count. The character of their participation and the proof concerning it conformed more precisely to the second count than to the first count.

To the question "Is the practical effect of the Commission's order in the Rigid Conduit case to require f. o. b. mill selling in that industry?" the Commissioner replied:

No. It was intended, however, to have the practical effect of preventing the respondents in that proceeding from continuing to use the basing-point pricing system which had been established and maintained by conspiracy, or from substituting for it the industry-wide use of any other pricing formula which produced the same result, and thus nullifying the effect of the proceeding.

In the face of this record the propagandists for amendment of the laws against monopoly have persistently attempted to show that count two of the Conduit case is a part of an effort to require everyone in the United States to sell f. o. b. mill, and that it is a threat to every competitive business enterprise that does not already sell f. o. b. mill.

This argument was made, in effect, by counsel for General Electric Co. before the circuit court of appeals. His brief said that the questioned raised was whether it is lawful for the company, acting individually and without collusion, to meet competition in good faith by offering its goods in markets nearer its competitors at the prices prevailing in those markets. He presumed without argument that to follow the same price formula as everyone else in the industry, in the knowledge of the fact that this formula eliminated price competition, constituted merely a meeting of competition in good faith. Assuming that because General Electric Co. could not comply with the order if it continued to follow the same old basing-point system, it, therefore, could not absorb freight at all, he argued that without freight absorption the company could not do a national business. Starting with this basic misrepresentation of the issue, the brief then eloquently defended the right to quote varying prices to meet competition and eloquently argued against Balkanization of the United States and creation of local monopolies. Mr. President, that is to laugh. It is to laugh, to hear the general counsel of General Electric talking about trying to avoid local monopoly.

This balderdash was considered and rejected by the court as summarily as it deserved to be. The circuit court's opinion summarizes the contention of the respondents that individual freight absorption is not illegal per se and that a seller finds it necessary to adjust his own price to meet the market price. The opinion then proceeds to describe the practices of the industry in language which makes it clear that the court realized that competitive freight absorption was not at issue. It said—and listen, Mr. President, to this language of the court:

> Each conduit seller knows that each of the other sellers is using the basing-point formula; each knows that by using it he will be able to quote identical delivered prices and thus present a condition of matched prices under which purchasers are isolated and deprived of choice among sellers so far as price advantage is concerned. Each seller must systematically increase or decrease his mill net price for customers at numerous destinations in order to match the delivered prices of his competitors. Each seller consciously intends not to attempt the exclusion of any competition from his natural freight advantage territory by reducing the price, and in effect invites others to share the available business at matched prices in his natural market in return for a reciprocal invitation.

That is the court speaking. It is clearly describing what I think is a reprehensible practice on the part of those found guilty of this type of restraint of trade.

The court then sustained the Federal Trade Commission's order. A subsequent tie vote in the Supreme Court confirmed this circuit court opinion.

The propaganda to amend the laws against monopoly has ignored both the Commission's findings and the Court's opinion in this case in order to adopt and popularize the contentions of counsel for the respondents. In the face of the record that I have just recited, this propaganda has asserted over and over that the effect of the Commission's action in the case is to prevent a single seller from reducing his prices to meet the prices of his competitors if the result is that these prices become identical, and that the effect is also to prevent any seller from adopting a pricing practice if he knows that any other seller is using the same practice. The only evidence other than assertion which has been offered to prove these statements consists of passages in the Government briefs, torn from context, and used in disregard of the official, interpretations of the case by the Federal Trade Commission itself. The Commission has said that it intended no such effect as is alleged and that it has not produced it. The circuit court rejected the argument that there was any such effect and made clear that what is at issue is a dogged industry-wide adherence to a formula that originated in conspiracy and that, so long as it persists, eliminates all price competition. Nevertheless, the propagandists continue to pretend that price formulas which eliminate competition are the same thing as price competition itself. They have addressed their propaganda to countless little-business men who, never having used a basing-point system for price-fixing purposes, have only a shadowy notion of what the Commission has been fighting against. The propaganda has alarmed many and in consequence has persuaded honest and sincere businessmen to join the clamor for a change in the law.

The propaganda has misrepresented the policy of the Federal Trade Commission as consistently as it has misrepresented the Commission's cases. A strenuous effort has been made to persuade the Congress that the Commission is trying to stretch the law by interpretation, so that every American business will be required to sell f. o . b. mill.

To use a slang phrase, Mr. President, "It just ain't so."

In trying to prove this point the propagandists have scraped the bottom of the barrel. They have succeeded in showing that in 1936 a Federal Trade Commissioner who is no longer a member of the Commission, acting as spokesman for another Commissioner who is now dead, read a statement before a Senate committee in which he endorsed a bill to outlaw basing-point pricing. They have also shown that the Federal Trade Commission, along with all others who were members of the Temporary National Economic Committee, recommended that the basing-point system be outlawed. The other participants in that recommendation included the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division; the representatives of the Securities and Exchange Commission; the representatives of the Department of Labor, the Department of Commerce, and the Treasury Department; the senior Senator from Wyoming; James Mead, former Senator from New York; Wallace White, former Senator from Maine; Clyde Williams, former Representative from Missouri; Hatton Sumners, former Representative from Texas; and Carol Reese, former Representative from Tennessee. The unanimous recommendation of these persons from both parties, both Houses of Congress, four Government departments, and two independent commissions has not led the propagandists to admit that there is something questionable about the basing-point system; nor have they made this recommendation the basis for a charge that efforts to smuggle an f. o. b. mill system into the law are being made by the senior Senator from Wyoming or any of the other Members of Congress or any of the other Government agencies that participated in the recommendation. However, the fact that the Federal Trade Commission was a party to the recommendation has been offered as proof that the Commission's basing-point proceedings must have some purpose quite different from that which they profess. The propagandists have also shown that an associate general counsel of the Federal Trade Commission, in his individual capacity, believes that f. o. b. mill pricing would be good for the country, though he does not believe that the present law requires it.

From such thin materials as these, the propagandists have concluded that the Federal Trade Commission is trying to interpret the law so that everyone must price f. o. b. mill. The Commission's official statements have been discounted, disregarded, or represented as a retreat under fire.

But what is the Commission's own policy as set forth by it officially? On June 2, at the very outset of the controversy, Robert Freer, then Chairman of the Commission, testified before a Senate committee as follows:

> Certainly, it is unwarranted to assume that the effect of this (the cement) decision is to outlaw all delivered prices or to require only f. o. b. mill prices. The Cement case is simply a reaffirmation of a principle which is a fundamental one in the law and economics of this country that collusion and combination and conspiracy to fix and maintain prices is contrary to the American system of free enterprise. * * * The Commission has no desire to suggest how prices should be quoted in any industry or to advise or participate in any decisions of business management.

On January 12 of this year the Commission made public a reply to questions from the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, one of which was whether the Commission favors imposition of f. o. b. mill pricing. The answer was:

> The Commission does not advocate the imposition of a requirement that business enterprises price their goods f. o. b. mill or that they use any other form of geographic pricing practice. In the Commission's opinion, one of the principal virtues of the antitrust laws is the fact that they maintain freedom of choice and variety of behavior among businessmen, favoring only the specific practices and conditions which have been condemned by law as destructive of competition.

This statement by the Commission went further to indicate that the basing-point system is not regarded by the Commission as contrary to law in all cases. It said:

> It is the Commission's view that the law permits a single enterprise to use any pricing practice it may choose, including the quotation of delivered prices computed from one or more basing points, unless that practice involves price discriminations which injure competition within the meaning of the Clayton Act.

The propaganda has misrepresented the nature of the basing-point system and the bearing of the desired legislation upon it. I have already quoted from the trade press of the steel industry declarations that the industry's purpose is to restore the basing-point system just as they used it before. That is what the monopolists are after, and the Senate of the United States should not let them get by with it. Before the propaganda effort had become fully organized, the trade papers of the steel industry not only admitted this fact but pointed out that there was nothing in the recent decisions which outlawed freight absorption to meet competition. Thus on May 13, 1948, Iron Age carried an article by John Anthony of its editorial staff, which said:

> The metal industry is of the opinion that the (cement) decision does nothing to outlaw independent producer action to meet competitive prices at any delivery points.

In the same issue, Eugene Hardy wrote that any idea that in the immediate future Congress would legalize any price-fixing system, whether basing point, zone, or other type, should be dispelled and that therefore Congress was being urged to attack the problem from an oblique angle. He suggested that a rule of reason or a trade practice conference procedure be developed applicable to such questions.

During the summer of 1948 the propaganda line was perfected. The offensive phrase "basing-point system" was discarded, and the pricing practices of the steel industry were represented as though they had been no more than merely absorbing freight where it was necessary to do so in order to meet competition. The letter from Ben Moreell, of Jones & Laughlin, which I have already quoted, said that this company would "discontinue pricing its products on a competitive basis through freight absorption." It said that the company took no issue with the Federal Trade Commission and the courts as to enforcement of the laws against price fixing and that—quoting from the letter of the president of Jones & Laughlin:

> We do not seek to perpetuate the basing-point system. We do not seek a rule which would permit the collection of phantom freight. All that we seek is the right to compete. In order to restore this basic principle, we believe it is essential that the Congress amend the applicable laws. There should be no statutory prohibition against charging lower mill prices to some customers than to others, when such low prices are necessary to permit products to be sold in a distant market to compete with another producer more favorably located with respect to that market.

Mr. President, that is a very interesting concept of free competition, that we should now fall for this line being offered in the Senate of the United States, that we should adopt the theory of the president of Jones & Laughlin, and obviously put to great disadvantage a small producer who, under our free competitive system, has placed himself in a position so that he can compete. Jones & Laughlin would take the advantage away from him. Since when has the American system of free competition reached the point that it should rest on the theory of uniformity from coast to coast and north to south so that the monopolists can take advantage of the small fellow who is trying to build his plant and develop his product in a locality or territory where the very location of the plant itself may give him a competitive advantage? Why should it not, if we are to have a free competitive system?

I care not what velvet words the president of Jones & Laughlin uses in his letter. His own language shows his intent, namely, to take advantage of the small producer who, under our competitive system, as the result of the location of his plant, may find himself in a position to compete with Jones & Laughlin.

On October 7 an article by Eugene Hardy, of Iron Age, made the strategy of this campaign in favor of freight absorption quite clear. He wrote that steel leaders were convinced that Congress would not legalize basing-point pricing or any other price system by name and that an effort to do so would require exhaustive definition which the Federal Trade Commission's attorneys might "misconstrue." He then said:

> Accordingly legislation to relieve the Commission of its weapons of attack on delivered pricing is receiving active consideration in steel circles.

He then mentioned three possible ways of accomplishing this result, one of which has subsequently become the basis of the industry's effort to persuade the Congress to legislate. It was to "make a clear legislative statement that any seller is privileged to make a lower price to meet a competitor's equally low price, and to do so as frequently and systematically as he wishes and without regard to whether his competitors may meet his and each other's prices."

As the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] has pointed out in his minority report on S. 1008, the effect of any such blanket authorization to absorb freight for the sake of quoting identical prices would be to legalize the entire mechanism of a basing-point system.

A second suggestion which was contained in the same article in Iron Age was that the Commission be prevented from issuing a cease-and-desist order requiring the discontinuance of any method of pricing which was not inherently unlawful, even when that method of pricing had been the subject of a conspiracy. This proposal makes clear the purpose to permit an industry caught in a conspiracy proceeding to continue the use of its old price formulas on the plea that they are now individual, even after the price fixing has been proved, and thus to make the Commission's order against the conspiracy a nullity. Apparently the organizers of the propaganda decided after further consideration that this proposal was so bare-faced as to be unwise; for it has not been pushed. Instead, the steel industry apparently relies upon the hope that if Congress specifically legislates in favor of industry-wide freight absorption that produces identical prices, the Commission will find it extremely difficult, if not impossible, to prove a conspiracy in the use of such a system or to order the discontinuance of such a system even after the conspiracy is proved.

If there can be any doubt as to the purpose which moves the steel companies in their efforts to get legislation, it should be dispelled by the testimony of Otis Brubaker, director of research of the United Steelworkers, CIO, before Senate committees on February 18 and March 30, 1949. He pointed out that while the steel companies have been arguing that the law now requires them to sell f. o. b. mill, and have been doing so on the products as to which they found it profitable, some of these same companies have been absorbing freight to meet competition in the stainless-steel branch of the industry and that one of them is doing so in forgings. He emphasized the fact that as the buyers' market develops these companies are absorbing freight upon an increasing number of products. He then said:

> Representatives of my union have been approached repeatedly by various companies which we have under contract asking for their support first, for S. 236, now for S. 1008, and H. R. 2222. They will tell us, if not you, that these amendments would permit them to return to their former basing-point systems. And, most importantly, they do plan to return to such a system in the near future. * * * As bluntly as it knows how, the CIO states to you that this pending legislation is the kind of legislation desired by the steel industry and by other price-fixing industries.

These are the broad outlines of the campaign by the steel industry and other monopolistic industries to get the law amended. They have misrepresented the Federal Trade Commission's policy and the results of the Federal Trade Commission's proceedings. They have misrepresented the nature of their pricing practices and have sought to identify maintenance of these practices with maintenance of competition. They have misrepresented the effect which they hope will flow from the proposed amendment of the law. By high-pressure tactics, veiled threats, and adoption of f. o. b. mill selling when it would be most inconvenient to their customers, they have obtained the support of many small-business men and have pretended that their whole campaign is a spontaneous expression of small business.

Mr. President, they have been motivated by monopolistic intentions. They seek to tighten the strangle hold of monopoly upon a free-enterprise system in America.

In closing, I wish most sincerely to thank the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], and the acting majority leader, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS], for making it possible for me to make these remarks for the RECORD tonight. I very much desired that they be in the RECORD, in the hope that at least some of my colleagues would scan them before the vote tomorrow. This is probably the best opportunity my colleagues in the Senate will have at this session of the Eighty-first Congress to strike a blow against monopolistic practices in America, and a vote against the pending bill is a vote against such practices.

I particularly thank the Senator from Pennsylvania for making it possible for me to catch a 5:35 plane. I shall be back on the floor of the Senate tomorrow, and I look forward to the pleasure of engaging in a discussion with him.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I might say to my friend from Oregon that, of course, I much prefer to ask questions during the course of his speech rather than to wait until the speech is concluded. Certainly, I have always yielded during the course of any remarks I have had to make so that running debate might occur during the course of the remarks. However, there may be some questions to be asked, in view of the words "propagandist," "reprehensible," and other such words, which were used with such abandon. Because such words were used I believe there is some necessity for clearing the RECORD, particularly so that my friend from Oregon will understand that no steel companies or any others came to the sponsor, the Senator from Pennsylvania, while the bill was being prepared. I really thought temporary legislation was needed, and I feared that the permanent legislation which had been offered to the Senate might cause even more confusion and that we should have more time to study it, particularly in view of the fact that we were awaiting the decision in the steel company case. Since it has been rendered by a vote of 4 to 4, one judge abstaining from participation, I feel there is necessity for clarifying the confusion at least to some extent. But I shall withhold my questions until tomorrow in order that the Senator may catch his plane.

Mr. MORSE. I shall look forward to having a discussion with the Senator later.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I am very hopeful that the pending measure will not be voted upon tomorrow. I know there are a good many Senators who desire to address themselves to this measure, of whom I am one. Although I am sure the distinguished author of the bill has in mind only the most salutary objectives for it, I feel that this measure is contrary to good sound public policy, as I humbly see it. It certainly adversely affects the South and her expanding industrialism, it seems to me. So I hope that the measure will not be voted upon tomorrow, and that I may have an opportunity to present my views upon the subject before the vote is had. I shall be back in the Senate on the day following tomorrow. If the occasion arises for a vote in my absence, however, I should like the RECORD to show that if present I would have voted "nay" upon the measure.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. PEPPER asked and obtained consent to be absent from the session of the Senate tomorrow in order to attend to public business in Florida.

DEMOCRATIC JEFFERSON-JACKSON DAY DINNER

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I regret that I shall have to leave the floor. I wish to offer something for the RECORD, though I do so at a time when the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] is not in the Chamber. What I shall say is a continuation of a discussion I had previously with him when he referred to the Democratic Jefferson-Jackson Day Dinner as the feast of Belshazzar. I pointed out, I thought with perfect propriety, that obviously those who were familiar with the background of the Belshazzar feast understood that Belshazzar was a Republican king, and that his Republican lords were gathered around him at the feast, but I did not remember as well as did Mr. Grover C. Hall, Jr., the distinguished editor of the Montgomery Advertiser of Montgomery, Ala., that I was on solid ground, because the New York World in a front page article in 1884, during the Blaine campaign, pictured a group of the Republican illustrious gathered around the banquet board with the Republican candidate, Mr. Blaine. The names of all these distinguished men of finance are given, and then above are the words "The royal feast of Belshazzar Blaine and the money kings."

In this editorial in the Montgomery Advertiser, commenting upon the debate in the Senate, it was pointed out by Mr. Grover C. Hall that had the Senator from Florida been a little more thoroughly familiar with our political history he would have immediately recalled the distinguished cartoon in the great newspaper, the New York World, to which I have adverted. So I ask unanimous consent that the editorial, and so far as may be possible, the cartoon be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE FEAST OF BELSHAZZAR, 1884

The Advertiser exhumed the above front page cartoon of the late and considerably lamented New York World to cast more light on Belshazzar's feast and on whether the Babylonian monarch was a Republican.

The controversy arose out of the $100 a plate Jackson Day dinner in Washington. Republican Senator BREWSTER, bilious with envy, took a look at the pomp and circumstance and the diamond-back terrapin soup menu and y-clept it a perdition passover—feast of Belshazzar.

Democratic Senator CLAUDE PEPPER, an Alabama lend-lense item to Florida, stood full in the combat position and declaimed:

"Obviously, Belshazzar was a Republican king."

We do not question that Senator PEPPER is correctly informed on that monarch's party affiliation; however, the statute of limitations has intervened. In PEPPER's haste to retaliate, he overlooked the devastating precedent of 1834.

That was the year of the campaign between Grover Cleveland and the Republican James G. Blaine, the continental liar from the State of Maine.

Blaine apparently had the election won until one night a group of parsons in politics called on him in New York and assured the Republican candidate that they were no mugwumps.

"We don't," quoth the Rev. Dr. Burchard, "propose to leave the Republican Party and identify ourselves with the party whose antecedents have been rum, Romanism, and rebellion."

Blaine was perhaps too tired and bored with the clerics to repudiate this anti-Catholic slur and he went on to a banquet at Delmonico's with such ones as Jay Gould, William (the public be damned) Vanderbilt, Andrew Carnegie, Russell Sage, John Jacob Astor. That became the Feast of Belshazzar.

The New York World knew what to do with that one. It ground out the above front page with the result that Blaine lost New York and the election to Cleveland.

PRICING PRACTICES—MORATORIUM

The Senate, in legislative session, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1008) to provide a 2-year moratorium with respect to the application of certain antitrust laws to individual, good-faith delivered price systems and freight-absorption practices.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MYERS. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Earlier this afternoon I announced that it would be my purpose to present a substitute for the bill which is the unfinished business. I have had a conference with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] with respect to it, and I have no doubt that we shall have some future conferences with regard to it, but there is so much interest in the matter that I feel I should introduce the bill and ask that it be printed at length in the RECORD so that all members of the committee and of the Senate, upon receiving the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in the morning, may have the full text of the proposal which I am about to make.

Mr. President, I had intended and had hoped that I might be able to return to the Senate in time to make an explanatory statement, but in view of the lateness of the hour and the fact that it would be very difficult to obtain a quorum at this time, I shall not attempt to make an explanatory statement here.

Let me say only that my feeling is that a mere moratorium is not sufficient to deal with the very substantial problem which confronts us. I feel that any law of Congress which is so ambiguous that the Supreme Court decides 4 and 4 with respect to its interpretation needs clarification. There is only one agency in the Government, and that is the Congress, which can take the initial legislative steps necessary to clear away the ambiguity.

It seems to me that we have two questions here. One of them is to deal with the question of ambiguity, but the other is to make certain that there shall not be opened any additional doors to violations of the antitrust laws. Conspiracies to restrain trade, agreements to fix prices, combinations which are violative of the intent and spirit of the traditional antimonopoly laws of the United States are so injurious to the public interest as a whole that they should not be invited by ambiguity. I therefore feel that I should invite scrutiny of the measure which I am offering, so that that door to monopolistic practices may be closed, if I have been unsuccessful in closing it in the drafting of this measure. I think I have not. I think I have successfully dealt with that phase of the problem. At the same time, it is a bill which will clear away the confusion which has resulted from the same facts which made the Supreme Court itself divide 4 to 4 as to the amendment of the law.

Mr. President, this should be introduced as a bill and be referred, I think, to the Committee on the Judiciary. Thereafter, during the debate, I shall offer it as a substitute for the pending measure.

I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1974) to define the application of the Federal Trade Commission Act and the Clayton Act to certain pricing practices, introduced by Mr. O'MAHONEY, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

SECTION 1. That the Federal Trade Commission Act (38 Stat. 719, as amended; 15 U. S. C. 45) is amended by adding at the end of section 5 (a) the following:

"It shall not be an unfair method of competition or an unfair or deceptive act or practice for a seller, acting independently, to quote or sell at delivered prices or to absorb freight, provided that this shall not make lawful any combination, conspiracy, or agreement, or any monopolistic, oppressive, deceptive, or fraudulent practice or other practice violative of law, carried out by or involving the use of delivered prices or freight absorption."

SEC. 2. Section 2 (a) of an act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914 (38 Stat. 730, as amended; 15 U. S. C. 13), is amended by substituting for the period at the end thereof a colon and adding thereto the following:

"And provided further, That it shall not be an unlawful discrimination in price for a seller, acting independently

"A. to quote or sell at delivered prices if such prices are identical at different delivery points or if differences between such prices are not such that their effect upon competition may be that prohibited by this section; or

"B. to absorb freight to meet the equally low price of a competitor in good faith, and this may include the maintenance, above or below the price of such competitor, of a differential in price which such seller customarily maintains."

SEC. 3. Section 2 (b) of an act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914 (38 Stat. 730, as amended; 15 U. S. C. 13), is amended to read as follows:

"(b) Upon proof being made, at any hearing on a complaint under this section, that there has been discrimination in price the effect of which upon competition may be that prohibited by the preceding subsection, or discrimination in services or facilities furnished, the burden of showing justification shall be upon the person charged with a violation of this section, and unless justification shall be affirmatively shown, the Commission is authorized to issue an order terminating the discrimination: Provided, further, That a seller may justify a discrimination by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor."

SEC. 4. As used in this act—

A. The word "price" shall have the meaning which it has under the commercial law applicable to the transaction.

B. The term "delivered price" shall mean a price at which a seller makes or offers to make delivery of a commodity to a buyer at any delivery point other than the seller's own place of business.

C. The term "absorb freight" shall mean to establish for any commodity at any delivery point a delivered price which, although as high as or higher than the seller's price for the same commodity at the point from which such commodity is shipped, is lower than the sum of the seller's price for such commodity at such point of shipment plus the actual cost to the seller for transportation of such commodity from such point of shipment to the delivery point.

D. The term "the effect may be" shall mean that there is a reasonable probability of the specified effect.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I am very happy that the Senator from Wyoming has introduced this bill for permanent legislation, and that he has introduced it tonight so that Senators may have the opportunity to read the contents of the proposed legislation in the morning.

I was extremely happy, too, to hear the Senator, who I believe is probably one of the firmest and greatest advocates in the Senate, if not in the country, of strict enforcement of the antitrust laws, indicate that some permanent legislation is necessary, rather than merely a moratorium.

I share the views which he has expressed today that something must be done by the Congress to overcome the confusion which exists. I share his views as to strict enforcement of the artitrust laws, and his view that nothing must be done by this Congress, or any other Congress, to give to the monopolists any impression that we are attempting to confer upon them greater power.

I am delighted that the Senator from Wyoming has not only introduced his bill, but has indicated that confusion exists and that there is need for the Congress to take action. I am only sorry the Senator from Wyoming was not present earlier in the afternoon, when those of us who have advocated that something be done were told that we were the pawns of the propagandists, the steel companies, and the great monopolists.

I am sure that those who know us well will give no credence to such statements, and will understand that our only purpose is to clear the atmosphere, that in clearing the atmosphere we still endorse and advocate the strict enforcement of the antitrust laws; and that in advocating this legislation we do not intend by any stretch of the imagination to give any comfort to the monopolists.

RECESS

Mr. President, I now move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou Fountain of Courage and Inspiration, increase our faith, and our belief in the eternal goodness of an all-wise God. As we face a new day and a new week, we thank Thee for the blessing and the bounty of work, for the grand essentials of a useful life are something to do, something to love, and something to hope for.

In all our labors, strengthen us with wisdom from above, that we may quit ourselves like men, and Thine shall be the praise. In the name of our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, May 27, 1949, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McDaniel, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

The message also announced that the Senate had ordered that the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 930) entitled "An act to provide for the liquidation of the trusts under the transfer agreements with State rural rehabilitation corporations, and for other purposes."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LYNCH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a magazine article.

Mr. MANSFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a speech.

LET US BUILD

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, we hear much about communism, fascism, and nazism these days—all three the same horse, but in different harness. We pass laws to punish them and others who would deprive us of our cherished freedoms. All this is good, but that alone is not enough to assure our success as a nation.

In our concern about these evils, we often overlook the things which will protect us against them better than anything else. We forget that the success of our great system of government will do more than all else to combat those who would do us injury as a people.

To make our system work:

We must strive with all our might to see to it that we have security on the farm.

We must strive with all our might to see to it that every farm home has all the cheap electricity which it can use and afford.

We must strive with all our might to see to it that everyone who has the ambition to do so can own his own farm.

We must strive with all our might to see to it that we have good roads to serve these farms.

We must strive with all our might to see to it that children born in these farm homes along with all other children in America have plenty of good food, warm clothing, and a chance for a good education.

We must strive with all our might to see to it that anyone who has the ambition and capacity to do so can own his own business and a home.

We must strive with all our might to see to it that all who desire to work shall have a chance to work at a living wage throughout the year and have a chance to own a home.

We must strive with all our might to see to it that the religious freedom earned for us by our forefathers spreads its influence from the teachings at our mother's knee into every nook and cranny of the land.

We must strive with all our might to see to it that one of the greatest sources of good government, the ability to get along with people, is fostered and encouraged.

The lack of understanding is the greatest hindrance to peace today. The Russians apparently have decided that they do not want to get along with the rest of the world; that strife serves them in their purposes better than cooperation with other nations.

Likewise, we must strive with all our might to see to it that the farmer, the laborer, and the small-business man get along together because we know well that if either of these three great groups falls into economic distress it means the distress of the other two. All three are so closely interwoven in a delicately balanced process of living with each other in our democracy that constant care must be exercised by each group to preserve that balance.

Our forefathers worked together. The farmer, the merchant, the laborer, all walked and fought in the cold and on bleeding feet at Valley Forge and a hundred battlegrounds to attain our freedom. We, like them, must get along together today if we are to preserve that freedom.

Let us build homes; let us build churches; let us build schools; let us build roads; let us build hospitals; let us build dams; let us build soil; let us build industry; let us build good will; and finally, let us prayerfully build toward a just and lasting peace.

If we do these things, nothing can stop our progress in northwest Arkansas and throughout the Nation as a whole.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including an editorial from yesterday's Times-Herald entitled "Meet Some More Capitalists," and at the end of the editorial I want to add, as part of it because it helps to bring out the purpose of the editorial better, an item entitled "Some 200 Foremen in a Western New York Company Made Up the Following List of How Profits Are Used."

APPROPRIATION REFORM ACT OF 1949

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and also to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BYRNES]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the financial condition of the Federal Government is most precarious. Our present fiscal dilemma is the result of the failure of this administration to budget intelligently. We are faced with such crude suggestions as the 5 percent over-all appropriations cut, and the unsound Mills corporation tax proposal, because the Democrat leadership failed to budget before it spent. This will always happen if we do not give serious consideration to the economic conditions of the country and their effect upon income and outgo.

For that reason I have today introduced a bill to revise the appropriations machinery of the Congress. I am inserting a statement describing the details of this bill in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

ARE AMERICAN COMMUNISTS DISLOYAL TO THE UNITED STATES?

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, an item in the Washington Times-Herald of May 29, 1949, quotes a former president of a State university as saying:

> It has not been proved that American Communists are disloyal to the United States, and that liberal thinkers are not convinced that a Communist is necessarily un-American.

Either complete ignorance of the objective of communisn and the record of disloyalty of Communists already shown by Government agencies or an attempt to hoodwink and lull the American people into false security can be the source of such a statement.

There cannot be a Communist who is a loyal American, and there cannot be a loyal American who is a Communist.

The one object of communism is the destruction of all free governments, including the United States, by force and bloodshed, if necessary. The two ideologies of government are as far apart as the poles. It is freedom or slavery; there can be no compromise or middle ground with communism.

The granting of an Atomic Energy Commission fellowship to Hans Freistadt, an avowed and admitted Communist, to be paid for by loyal American taxpayers, places the issue squarely before the country. This young Communist from the campus of the University of North Carolina definitely points the direction of Communist thinking when he says:

> Our scientists are discriminated against because of their political views. The whole concept of academic freedom is in danger.

He assumes that the Communist Party is a political party. He is 100-percent wrong. It is sheer idiocy and impudent nonsense. It is a brazen fraud. Every Communist is controlled by Russia, and the Communist Party is the fifth column of Russia here and in every other freedom-loving country. It is hostile to our way of life.

Every sensible and loyal American knows that under our philosophy of government the defeat of any one of our political parties in a free election does not mean the end of that party or its political faith. Another day and another chance will come, and their rights are preserved by law.

Is there anyone stupid enough to believe, if the Communist Party should win an election in the United States, that there would ever be another election? All other political faiths would end, their leaders, including all Members of Congress, shot or deported, their property confiscated, and their organizations destroyed.

The American people must be on guard against such rosewater deceit as expressed in the public press a day or two ago, notwithstanding the prominence of its author. That makes his utterance all the more dangerous.

Not $1 should be spent on educating those who seek the wreck and ruin of our people and the substitution of tyranny for freedom. Mr. Lilienthal has betrayed his country and should be removed at once from public office.

COLUMBIA VALLEY AUTHORITY

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ELLSWORTH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, the proposal sponsored by the President which would turn the sovereign States of the Pacific Northwest into a rigidly controlled unit called a Columbia Valley Authority is too radical a departure toward dictatorship to be tolerated even by the Socialist Party. I have occasionally referred to the scheme as socialistic. I have to take that statement back now. At its meeting in Seattle, May 13, the Socialist Party issued a statement condemning the pending CVA bills:

> We realize that CVA is a socialistic venture—

Their formal statement says.

> The Socialist Party is alarmed at the present rapid trend toward collectivization without democratic controls.

Upon analysis of H. R. 4236, the Mitchell bill, the Socialist Party finds no adequate safeguards to insure democratic control under this measure. It centralizes power in the President and three of his appointees, thereby in some measure justifying the charge of opponents that CVA will be a step in the direction of the authoritarian state.

I never thought the day would come when I could agree with a Socialist statement but I do agree with their statement which I have just quoted.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

THE WALTHAM WATCH CO.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include a description of the Waltham Watch Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago the members of the Massachusetts delegation and others spoke of the plight of the Waltham Watch Co. and the fact that the company had been forced to close down because of foreign competition. It was at the time when the trade agreement bill came up, and we protested allowing over 60 percent of the trade to go to the Swiss companies.

Today, Mr. Speaker, the Waltham Watch Co., thanks to the very cooperative efforts of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, is again trying to manufacture. On yesterday, Memorial Day, all the papers in Massachusetts, and the Washington Star here in the District of Columbia, carried articles telling of what the Waltham Watch Co. did in the making of timepieces and precision instruments for the Army, Navy, and the Marine Corps during the war. They performed a very patriotic service, and they are dedicating their new watches to the veteran. These watches are made by Americans—for Americans—in an American plant. The following is the story carried in the papers:

DEDICATED TO THE 12,000,000 MEN AND WOMEN WHO CONSTITUTED AMERICA'S FIGHTING FORCES IN WORLD WAR II: THE VETERAN—THE FIRST OF WALTHAM'S NEW NATIONAL DEFENSE SERIES

The Waltham Watch Co. completes a century of service by introducing a new and magnificent timepiece.

On this Memorial Day, Waltham, a century-old American industry—itself a veteran of four wars—salutes every American veteran at home, in hospitals, at final rest.

On this Memorial Day, Waltham dedicates and names the first of its 1950 national-defense series the Veteran, in honor of the 12,000,000 men and women who served our country in World War II.

The Veteran is designed in four handsome models, each dedicated to a branch of the United States armed services—the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the Air Force. Each is a masterpiece of American precision craftsmanship. Each represents the ultimate in styling and taste.

For 100 years, Waltham's distinguished American timepieces have measured the steady march of American progress. Grave minutes and hours of the Civil War were weighed by Abraham Lincoln to the solemn ticking of his Waltham watch.

Franklin D. Roosevelt's history-making schedule during World War II was timed by the unfailing accuracy of his American-made Waltham.

During the fateful hours of the war, when skill and dependability were on trial under fire, a vast army of American precision craftsmen at Waltham Watch Co. worked night and day to produce military timepieces, aircraft clocks, compasses, speedometers, fuses, rifle parts. On land, on sea, in the air, America's fighting men depended on Waltham.

Today it is with very real pride, and with a deep sense of gratitude, that the Waltham Watch Co. salutes loyalty and courage at its finest.

The first of Waltham's new national-defense series will honor the man of the century: the veteran.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BARING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada?

There was no objection.

[Mr. BARING addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WILSON of Oklahoma asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD on the subject Making Child Abandonment a Federal Offense.

Mr. CHURCH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include remarks he made on the radio last Thursday evening.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, May 10, 1949, the distinguished Governor of our State, Hon. Sid McMath, made an address before the Interstate Oil Compact Commission at Jacksonville, Fla., on the subject How Conservation Has Encouraged Development in Arkansas, containing some very important and significant statements on the oil policy of the United States.

I ask unanimous consent that this statement may be included in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

INVESTIGATING CERTAIN MATTERS PERTAINING TO THE MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 215 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, acting as a whole or by duly authorized subcommittee or subcommittees, appointed by the chairman of said committee, is authorized and directed to conduct full and complete studies and investigations and to make such inquiries as said Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries may consider important or pertinent to the merchant marine and fisheries of the United States or any of the Territories thereof, or to any matter coming within the jurisdiction of said committee.

That the committee shall report to the House of Representatives at the earliest practicable date or dates during the present Congress the results of their studies, investigations, and inquiries, with such recommendations for legislation or otherwise as the committee deems desirable.

The committee or any subcommittee thereof is authorized to sit and act at such times and places within or without the United States whether the Congress is in session, has recessed, or is adjourned; to hold such hearings as it deems necessary; to employ such consultants, specialists, clerks, or other assistants; to travel and authorize its assistants to travel; to utilize such transportation, housing, or other facilities as any governmental agency may make available; to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents; to administer such oaths; to take such testimony; and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per one hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $100,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the House upon vouchers authorized by the committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on House Administration.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 16, after the word "advisable.", strike out the balance of the resolution.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may desire to use.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution just read gives the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries the power of subpena, in addition to other investigatory powers. These powers have been granted to other legislative committees and I do not know of a committee that is more justified in receiving this additional power than the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, especially in view of its splendid personnel and its chairman who has served at all times with distinction and in the best interest of our country.

The evidence before the Rules Committee as presented by the chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND], is such that I feel there should not be a single vote cast against the resolution. That committee has introduced evidence showing that in the Seventy-ninth Congress an investigation was started which indicated that some $26,000,000 is owed to the Federal Government through the Maritime Commission and the War Shipping Administration. I feel that this investigation will bring about early action and recovery of that vast sum of money. There are other items and other things also I feel the committee should investigate, namely the overcharges on the part of the oil companies to the Government involving millions of dollars.

Mr. Speaker, in view of these facts the Rules Committee has unanimously reported this resolution. I am satisfied that after the House hears from the chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, who will give more background and outline the reasons for this resolution, it will pass without a single vote against it.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], chairman of the Rules Committee, has explained, House Resolution 215 gives to the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries certain powers, either as a full committee or as a subcommittee, to conduct investigations and studies, to subpena witnesses, place them under oath, and to compel the production of records.

The resolution was reported unanimously by the Rules Committee. In my opinion, it is of the utmost importance that we give to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries the same power and the same authority to conduct investigations which has been given to almost every other standing committee of the House. The committee is made up of exceptionally able Members of the House. It is headed by the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND], who has had many years of experience in the work of that committee and has proven himself a very able chairman.

As the gentleman from Illinois explained to you, the authorizing of this investigation is of extreme importance because of the situation which has arisen in connection with many of our merchant-marine problems. It is indicated that if this investigating authority is granted, that the committee will undoubtedly bring about actions which will result in the recovery of huge sums of money into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. I forgot to mention it, but I am satisfied that this investigation will bring about the recovery of millions and millions of dollars.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Yes, I am trying to say that the minority agrees fully with the views expressed by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I am glad that the gentlemen referred to the type of people that make up this great committee. The make-up of this committee is insurance enough that the powers we propose to give the committee will not be abused.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I fully agree with the gentleman from Georgia, and there is such great confidence in the gentleman from Virginia, Chairman BLAND, and in the membership of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries that there is no request for time on this side of the aisle.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I also congratulate the gentleman from Ohio for joining in this investigation. From my viewpoint it is 25 years late. I urged the change in policy with reference to Alaska—and that is what this is directed at—when I came back from that Territory in 1923. There are no fish traps in Canada. All along the Canadian coast we saw hundreds of small fishermen out fishing for a living. But, when it got to Alaska we found large concerns had monopolized the mouths of those streams up which the salmon go on their way to the spawning grounds, and had shut the Alaskan out from the fishing grounds. For that reason I am wholeheartedly in favor of this investigation. The value of the fishery products out of the Alaskan waters amount to more in dollars and cents than the wheat crop in Ohio or the cotton crop in Tennessee, and if those people who live there and make it their permanent home have the same privilege of fishing that they have in Canada, it would be a much more desirable place in which to live.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I thank the gentleman from Mississippi very much for his contribution.

Mr. Speaker, there seems to be such unanimous approval of this resolution, that I hope it will be adopted by a unanimous vote, as evidence of the great affection for, and our great confidence in, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND], the chairman, and in and for the membership of this committee.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I feel gratified that the gentleman from Ohio feels as I do in this matter. Therefore, I shall not take up any more time except to yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMPSON].

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, of course, I am very much in favor of the measure before us. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and also that my distinguished chairman the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] may be given like permission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, it is very gratifying to me and, I am sure, to all of my colleagues on the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries to hear the warm words just spoken concerning our beloved chairman, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND]. The affection which we all feel for him is deep and abiding and needs no further words from me at this time.

I would like, however, to take this opportunity to pay a compliment to the Subcommittee on Fisheries and Wildlife Conservation of which it is my honor to be the chairman. Our schedule of hearings during this Congress has been unusually heavy and it has been necessary for me to ask my members to convene frequently and for long hours. They have been faithful and loyal and have attacked each problem with the same painstaking care. We have been able to report out many measures which will, I trust, have a far-reaching effect on the fishing industry and on the conservation of our wildlife. The members of this committee are the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BOYKIN], the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. WICKERSHAM], the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE], the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT], the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WELCH], the gentleman from New York [Mr. MURPHY], the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FUGATE], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WEICHEL], the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAND], the gentleman from Washington [Mr. TOLLEFSON], the gentleman from California [Mr. ALLEN], the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MILLER], and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. POTTER].

May I also express my appreciation at this time for the frequent attendance at our hearings of the distinguished chairman of the main committee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND], and of the ranking Republican member, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WEICHEL].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I am deeply indebted to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], the chairman of the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from Ohio Mr. CLARENCE BROWN, of the minority, and other members of the committee and the House for their kindly comments on my work. They have been very generous, and more so than I deserve, but I am deeply grateful nevertheless. I am also very much pleased at the commendations of the work of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, of which I am chairman. All that was said of these other members is absolutely true, and we are all extremely grateful.

House Resolution 215 would authorize and direct the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, to conduct full and complete studies and investigations of all matters pertaining to the merchant marine as may be deemed proper.

Although much progress has been made since the termination of hostilities of World War II to the end of returning our American merchant marine to full private ownership and operation in accordance with our national maritime policy, shipping conditions in foreign and domestic commerce are still unsettled and many problems yet remain to be solved before the transition from wartime and emergency status can be completed. This committee has held extensive hearings and reported out proposed legislation relative to the merchant marine and the problems with which it is faced, but the consideration of various legislation during this session with the studies thereon has convinced me that the Congress should take immediate action to study in fullest detail the problems affecting our merchant marine in an earnest effort to aid in the prompt solution of our problems and the correction of all deterrents to our leadership on the seas of the worlds, and the promotion of world trade, which I consider of supreme importance to our national economy.

We must, in the interest of national security, study the composition of our foreign and domestic merchant marine, and shipbuilding and ship-repair facilities; the extent and availability of skilled manpower for ship operation, shipbuilding, and ship repair; the effect and nature of competition from foreign shipping; the possibility of the development of a long-range American tramp shipping fleet; the solution on a long-range basis of the problems of the coastwise and intercoastal shipping, including the shipping requirements of the Territory of Alaska; and the proper relationship of the Army and Navy in the conduct of nonmilitary shipping operations. We should study the suggestions of various surveys and studies on the subject of our merchant marine, including the conclusions of the Hoover Commission regarding proposed changes in the Maritime Commission. We should also inquire into the operations of the Merchant Marine Academy and the Coast Guard Academy, to the end that they shall complete their mission in our world leadership. Our committee is charged with the problems affecting the fisheries of the United States and all of the Territories thereof.

I feel that the authority sought in House Resolution 215 is necessary because, among other things, we have been informed in the past several months of the serious and immediate needs of the fisheries of the United States for rehabilitation and development. The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries is also charged with legislation regarding various problems relative to the Panama Canal, including the very difficult question of a proposed sea-level canal and a terminal-lake canal. The latter proposal involves an estimated cost to the United States of $3,500,000,000. The investigation also involves many matters of like import as those specifically mentioned which may arise in connection with the various activities under the jurisdiction of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee. Consequently, we should have available the flexibility of this resolution.

In order to adequately make the studies and investigations which may be required during the remainder of the Eighty-first Congress, I estimate that we should have available a sufficient fund to meet the expense of the members of the committee and its staff, but which will be appropriated as needed. In the past, investigations by this committee have always returned many times the amount appropriated for its use. One of our primary investigatory activities will be to follow up the large sums of uncollected moneys owed by private companies to the Government through the Maritime Commission and the War Shipping Administration. Some progress was made during the Eightieth Congress, but according to recent inquiries made by the Senate Expenditures Committee and newspaper reports, there has been as much as $26,000,000 uncollected.

It is essential at this time that the Congress review our American merchant marine situation and seek a long-range solution to the many problems which have presented themselves during the transition period following the war. Today we began hearings to that end and wish to pursue the inquiries deemed necessary. In this the Senate has a similar investigatory resolution and we are working closely with them in order to avoid overlapping investigation. On the other hand, it is necessary that we have the authority hereby requested and necessary funds to perform effectively during the period of our authority. In the past years we have always returned a part of the moneys provided for us. There have been no junketing tours, but industrious studies by day and night, and only such voyages to Alaska and the Panama Canal as were necessary to the proper administration of the responsibilities resting upon the committee.

The matters to be covered in investigations under House Resolution 215 may be summarized briefly as follows:

First. Collection of moneys due the United States Maritime Commission and War Shipping Administration.

Second. Shipbuilding and ship-repair industry.

Third. Manpower, shipbuilding, operation, repair.

Fourth. Foreign competition, ECA, watchdog committee. This involves the maximum use of American ships in foreign trade.

Fifth. Coastwise, intercoastal, and Great Lakes shipping.

Sixth. Alaska shipping problems.

Seventh. Army and Navy in commercial shipping.

Eighth. Reserve fleets.

Ninth. Fisheries resources, rehabilitation and development.

Tenth. Sea-level Panama Canal.

Eleventh. Merchant Marine and Coast Guard Academies.

Twelfth. Hoover Commission recommendations on Maritime Commission.

Thirteenth. Shipping conferences, their scope and effect.

Fourteenth. Preservation of laid-up fleets for immediate use when needed.

Fifteenth. The maximum use of our merchant marine to promote our trade and to secure, so far as possible, the peace of the world.

Recently, the committee, through the medium of its investigators and a study of other committee records, ascertained that many of the uncollected claims for moneys due the Maritime Commission and the War Shipping Administration had never been billed and additional amounts which had never been analyzed. The amount of these uncollected claims is estimated at about $26,000,000. Early in this session our staff consulted with the Maritime Commission officials and urged that they take steps to reduce this backlog.

As of March 25, 1949, the Commission staff began to take action and by April 30, 1949, had assigned a total of 50 employees to the work of screening all of the Commission's accounts and billing in all cases where moneys remained due. Since the Commission has had no procedure for keeping track of the amounts billed and collected on account of items in the $26,000,000 backlog, there is no way of knowing the extent to which such backlog has been reduced. However, at the instance of the committee's staff, the Commission has agreed to report monthly to the committee staff the state of its progress in collections. Since this procedure was established the Commission as of April 30 issued 241 invoices, amounting to $362,676.81, of which $280,884.63 was billed to Government departments and $81,792.18 was billed to others. As of April 30, $3,700.75 had been collected from debtors other than Government departments. The claims billed to Government departments represented a variety of interdepartmental transfers for which reimbursement should be made. The items owed by other than governmental departments arose out of various wartime claims against vendors furnishing vessels construction materials. While the results shown in the first month of operation under the present procedure are not impressive, we believe that without constant attention to the problem and insistence upon complete and prompt screening and billing of the Commission's accounts very material progress will show within the next several months.

When there was pending before the Congress recently legislation extending the charter powers of the Commission, Representative CASE of South Dakota attached an amendment to protect a situation which had been brought to the attention of the Appropriations Committee. He has furnished a copy of the testimony before the Appropriations Committee and the matter is now being pursued by our committee staff.

In addition, we have written all members of the Rules Committee asking that our committee staff be supplied with all leads or facts of which they may hear that should be followed by our committee staff and we have great confidence that we may get good results.

In addition, we are soliciting from the present and all former members of the Maritime Commission suggestions as to improvements in Commission procedure or legislation.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING CONTRACT SETTLEMENT ACT OF 1944

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 220 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 834) to amend the Contract Settlement Act of 1944 so as to authorize the payment of fair compensation to persons contracting to deliver certain strategic or critical minerals or metals in cases of failure to recover reasonable costs, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 30 minutes of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 834) to amend the Contract Settlement Act of 1944 so as to authorize the payment of fair compensation to persons who contracted to deliver certain strategic or critical minerals or metals and who failed to recover reasonable costs, and for other purposes.

As far as I know, there is no controversy over this bill, and I see no purpose in an extended discussion under the rule.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Texas has explained, House Resolution 220 makes in order the consideration of the bill H. R. 834. This rule was granted by the Committee on Rules by unanimous vote. The measure was also reported from the Committee on the Judiciary by a unanimous vote. So, seemingly, there is little controversy in connection with the measure. H. R. 834 simply amends the Contract Settlement Act so as to permit the consideration under the provisions of that law, claims against the Government in connection with mining operations to obtain certain strategic materials required by the Government during the war. I believe it was the thought of the Congress when we passed the Contract Settlement Act that it would cover such cases, but seemingly there is some technical question as to whether mining operations and Government contracts therefor are covered. This measure would simply permit such contracts to come under the purview of the original act.

Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 834) to amend the Contract Settlement Act of 1944 so as to authorize the payment of fair compensation to persons contracting to deliver certain strategic or critical minerals or metals in cases of failure to recover reasonable costs, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 834, with Mr. BURLESON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the measure under consideration is similar to one of the series of bills suggested by the Committee on Postwar Economic Policy and Planning as a means of dealing fairly and equitably with that class of contractors who engaged in the war effort. This bill would not be necessary but for the fact that the Contract Settlement Act provides very specifically for the treatment of cases where there has been a formal contract. The type of claimant who will be made whole, if this measure is enacted, is one who did not have a contract, for the most part, and I dare say that 98 percent of the claimants come within the category of being very small operators who were persuaded by the Government to develop mining operations which were of such a nature as not to appeal to such operators unless there was reasonable assurance that the risk would not be too great. These people were persuaded by various Government officials to operate low-producing mines. In many of the cases they were advanced money by the RFC and were given priorities by the War Production Board. As I stated before, it was a very hazardous undertaking which was made necessary because the critical materials they sought were not available due to the stoppage of imports by submarine warfare. These people lost money. The idea underlying this bill is to make them whole, where there has been no speculation and where the losses were not occasioned by mismanagement or negligence. The Committee on the Judiciary feels that it has set up safeguards so that advantage cannot be taken of the United States. In our judgment, it is the only way that equitable relief can be provided for this remaining class of war contractors. Under the Lucas Act, where a contract was terminated, relief was provided for under similar circumstances. It is necessary that this legislation be enacted in order to deal with this class of contractors as we have dealt with every other class of contractors engaged in the war effort.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may desire.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER], chairman of the subcommittee, which held the hearings and gave preliminary consideration to this bill, has stated briefly and concisely the circumstances necessitating this legislation. A similar bill was considered and favorably reported by the Committee on the Judiciary in the Eightieth Congress; however, it was never reached on the calendar. The subcommittee and the full committee in the present Congress unanimously recommend that this bill become law. The observer will note that the bill is technical; yet it is understandable. Possibly I cannot add much to the general explanation; however, I am sure that the committee is prepared to answer all inquiries.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. COLE of New York. Can the gentleman apprise us of the amount of money involved in this?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, chairman of the subcommittee, if he will be good enough to answer the gentleman's inquiry.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, it is very difficult to estimate the correct or entire amount involved. We had experience with the same sort of legislation after the last war. I think claims amounting to over $3,000,000 were paid. It is utterly impossible to estimate the amount that will be claimed.

Mr. MICHENER. The Members will find a most comprehensive committee report accompanying the bill, which was filed on March 2, 1949; therefore, ample time has been given for adequate consideration by the entire membership.

Mr. Chairman, at the risk of repetition, may I state that the purpose of the bill is to compensate persons who, without fault or negligence, suffered losses in attempting to supply certain strategic or critical minerals or metals for the war effort.

During the recent war the need of the Government for certain strategic and critical minerals led to the opening and working of a number of mines which would have been deemed submarginal and uneconomical to operate in normal times. These actions were encouraged by the Government in many ways—the assistance of the Bureau of Mines in the Interior Department in locating mines and determining their probable productivity, the assistance of the War Production Board in granting priority assistance for mining equipment and other needs, and the assistance of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in contracting to buy the product of these mines under announced terms and conditions. There is no doubt in the minds of the committee that most, if not all, of those who would benefit by this bill were induced to engage in the activities resulting in their present losses because of official representations of authorized Government agents.

The committee recognizes that the bill singles out a particular class of war contractors for relief, but feels that such discrimination is well justified. In this thought, the committee is acting not without precedent. Under the Dent Act passed after World War I for the purpose of granting relief to mines, and which contained provisions analogous to, but not as restricted as, the present bill, 1,208 claims were filed as of June 30, 1921. Of these, 1,150 had been acted on by the Government as of that date. Three hundred and seventy-three claims were approved for a total expenditure by the Government of $3,162,040.75; 770 claims were denied; and 58 remained pending. There is no way of computing the number or monetary value of potential claims under the pending bill. Approximately 11,000 mines were listed on the War Production Board mailing list, and 7,000 of these received priority assistance.

The precedent of the Dent Act only partially predicates the action of the committee. We are also impressed with the harsh results of the manner in which the Government abruptly terminated the program for production of critical minerals. The inducements offered by the Government are not contested. Amongst other things, it specified a grade of ore—insofar as manganese was concerned, and the manganese operations are considered to represent the bulk of the losses—that the typical domestic mining property was capable of producing, and offered to accept total production of that or higher grades. Prompted by these inducements, claimants invested heavily in equipping and operating mining sites. Suddenly, about the time the submarine menace in the recent war ended, making accessible the cheaper and higher grade ores in foreign countries, the Government terminated its program by the simple and very effective method of increasing the minimum specification of the ore which they would accept. Automatically, this threw out of business the great majority of manganese miners who found it impossible to meet the increased specifications and who could not afford the expensive and elaborate equipment needed to refine the ore to meet the new specifications. For the most part the men who suffered losses were small, individual operators, who in many cases lost their life savings in their ventures.

There is an essential and fundamental difference between mining operations and operations of other war contractors, such as the manufacturer. The miner cannot be assured of his operation beyond the production of the ore in sight or that which is proven in his mine, plus that doubtful quantity which his experience and judgment leads him to expect. He has all the risks and uncertainties of the manufacturer, such as the fluctuating cost of labor, power, and materials, plus the great risk of exhausting his known ore reserve without being able to find new ones. This risk is even more pronounced in the smaller mines with their more uncertain ore deposits. The exclusion in the bill of so-called speculative ventures must, therefore, be considered in the light of the particular industry, for to some extent all mining ventures are speculative. It is not the intent of this committee that the language in the bill be construed in this restrictive sense.

We further are of the opinion that to deny relief to these claimants would imperil the position of the Government were another emergency to arise requiring immediate supplies of the critical minerals here involved. Niggardly treatment now of their claims would undoubtely persuade them against reengaging in the same activity in the event they were called upon to do so. The potential loss to the Government in such case cannot be predicted, but any degree of shortage of such vital materials when needed could be disastrous to our welfare.

The committee feels that relief should be granted, on the restricted basis provided by the committee amendment, both to claimants who held formal contracts with the Government or with a war contractor or subcontractors and to those who did not hold such contracts but were induced to engage in the activities in question by representations made by authorized Government agents.

Many of those who held formal contracts for the delivery of fixed amounts of strategic minerals or metals were unable to complete such contracts for a variety of reasons beyond their control, such as the unforeseen exhaustion of ore bodies of required specifications. In other cases, contracts made for limited quantities were not renewed, leaving claimants with no means of recovering the heavy investment which they had made in the justified belief that the Government's requirements would be such as to result in continued purchases over a more extended period.

It would appear that the Contract Settlement Act does not provide for the reimbursement of losses suffered by claimants with formal contracts falling within these two or certain other categories, since their contracts would not have been "terminated" within the meaning of that act. While the Lucas Act might have been availed of in certain of these cases, it would seem clear that it did not cover all of them. For example, situations in which, even though for reasons beyond the claimant's control, no metals or minerals were actually delivered under a contract would not give rise to a claim under that act; furthermore, the time to file claims under the Lucas Act expired on February 7, 1947.

Many of those who had no formal contracts, and who incurred losses, filed claims under section 17 (a) of the Contract Settlement Act. Some of these were able to establish a "request to proceed" pursuant to that section and have been allowed to recover. Others, however, failed to have their claims allowed by virtue of a ruling of the appeal board in the Office of Contract Settlement that a "request to proceed" must be addressed specifically to the claimant, and a published or posted request addressed to the public at large is not sufficient.

This bill is grounded in justice and those patriotic citizens who during the hour of our distress in the midst of the war were willing to hazard their own fortunes in an effort to comply with the request of their Government, must not now be penalized and bankrupted because conditions concerning the availability of strategic war materials unexpectedly and suddenly changed. I hope that this bill will pass unanimously. I have heard of no opposition.

Mr. Chairman, there are no requests for time on the minority side. I, therefore, reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLE].

Mr. ENGLE of California. Mr. Chairman, in the Eightieth Congress, the Honorable Henderson H. Carson, of Ohio, introduced and sponsored H. R. 4928, which was referred to the House Judiciary Committee, and after extensive hearings and careful deliberations, this committee reported favorably and, with amendments, recommended that the bill be passed. Unfortunately, the report came out late in the closing session and the bill failed to reach the floor in time for a vote.

On January 5, 1949, I introduced H. R. 834, which bill is exactly as reported out by the House Judiciary Committee last year, and my colleagues, the Honorable A. S. J. CARNAHAN, of Missouri, and WILBUR D. MILLS, of Arkansas, have introduced similar bills. These bills have also been reported favorably by the House Judiciary Committee with recommendation that they do pass. The report accompanying H. R. 834, submitted by the Honorable FRANCIS E. WALTER, clearly and succinctly states the purpose for which the bill is drawn, the precedent for the committee's action, the need for the relief provided, the basis upon which it is predicated, and, with equal clarity, enumerates the safeguards against exploitation. I want to take this opportunity to commend the committee on the thoroughness of the report and the clarity with which it is rendered and earnestly request that it be read by every Member.

This bill is to amend the Contract Settlement Act of 1944 so as to authorize, belatedly, the payment of fair compensation to persons contracting to deliver strategic or critical minerals or metals during the war. The amendment is based upon the repeatedly acknowledged obligation of the American people to provide fair compensation for all who contributed materials, services, or facilities for the prosecution of World War II and is, in substance, a reenactment of similar remedial legislation adopted by the Congress after World War I, expanded to include the minerals and metals designated by the Army and Navy Munitions Board as strategic or critical. The amendment serves to rationalize the payment of fair compensation so that the war contractor who supplied critical minerals and metals is treated the same as any other supplier of materials, services, or facilities used in the prosecution of the war, and to correct presently existing discriminatory practices resulting from technically inconsistent or conflicting provisions of the act itself, whereby the claim of one producer is allowed and that of another is denied.

Commencing with the war-induced emergency, the President of the United States, the Congress, and hundreds of officers and representatives of wartime Government agencies repeatedly importuned the members of the mining fraternity to accelerate exploration, development, and production so that critical minerals and metals used in the manufacture of implements of war might be in maximum supply.

Pursuant to policies formulated by the War Production Board, The Metals Reserve Company, organized in June 1940 to act as a Government purchasing agent, created a special market for critical minerals and metals, and by press, by radio, and by personal appeal, sought to stimulate production by offering all sorts of inducements, such as loans, subsidies, and decentralized special services.

During 1943 and 1944, when the supply of these vital materials became critical, members of the Small Business Committee of the Senate, accompanied by officials or representatives of the MRC, the WPB, and the OPA, visited ore-producing areas practically all over the United States, and at centers like Phoenix, Tucson, and Prescott, Ariz.; Salt Lake City, Utah; Helena and Missoula, Mont.; Spokane and Seattle, Wash.; Las Vegas, Reno, and Procha, Nev.; Deming, N. Mex., and in ore-producing sections of California, and so forth, the Government's program of stimulation was explained and in person urged upon producers in those respective areas. Every aid and assistance was offered to insure greater mining activity, and the members of the industry were promised a market which would insure a fair return on an investment made in reliance upon these representations.

Purchase depots and stock piles were established in ore-producing areas under the direction and control of MRC agents, opening the buying program to anyone on substantially an unqualified basis. The respective agencies provided throughout the period loans, special prices, preferred markets, priorities, and subsidies. I commend for your reading the hearings before the House Judiciary Committee on March 12 and 19, 1948, on this matter which relates the exact statements that were made by the President of the United States and responsible heads of agencies involved to stimulate this program. I want you to note some examples of the stimuli offered, the personal pressure exerted, and promises made, because here, without doubt, a presently undischarged obligation was created.

The miners' good faith response to the Government's intense drive for increased production we cannot gainsay. Many of those loyal producers, especially from among those of small means, failed to recover the actual costs of their patriotic endeavor, due to natural hazards common to mining and over which the miners had no control, and many of them lost every penny they had.

During the war period, the Government contracting agencies acquired these critical metals and minerals, in three ways: First, different types of contracts, some of which contained settlement provisions, and some of which did not; second, subsidy or premium price plans, providing for payment of costs; and, third, by small-lot purchases direct from the miner at Government depots. I call your attention to these facts primarily to show that, in acquiring critical minerals and metals for the war program, the Government maintained exactly the same contractual relationship with the miners as it did with the manufacturers, and that one is just as much a war contractor as the other.

In 1944 or thereabouts, when the so-called cut-backs in the ore-buying program came, the contracts were terminated or canceled. In every instance termination, either by cancellation or otherwise, was attributable to circumstances over which the producer had no control.

In the meantime, Congress recognized the hardships which had been forced on many war contractors, and in an effort to be fair, passed the Contract Settlement Act which was approved July 1, 1944, the objective of which was to assure final and uniform settlement of claims under all terminated war contracts, and was intended specifically to provide all war contractors with speedy and fair compensation for the termination of their war contracts.

That Congress intended to pay fair compensation to the wartime producer of critical minerals and metals is evidenced by the words of the Honorable James G. Scrugham, former Senator from Nevada, when he said to a group of miners on August 7, 1944, at Phoenix, Ariz., shortly after the adoption of the Contract Settlement Act:

> The Congress had included in the recently passed Contract Settlement Act authority for the Office of Contract Settlement to deal with quasi and informal contracts and make settlements therefor. It was the intent of the Congress under this act to give the agencies and the Office of Contract Settlement such authority that a war minerals relief bill would not be necessary. What the results will be depends upon the administration of the act as set up in the Office of Contract Settlement.
> There is no reason, ladies and gentlemen, why you of the mining industry and of other industries who did not wait or quibble about contracts before doing their best for the war effort should not be compensated. I know that I did not intend, and I now know that neither the Senate nor the House intended that we should have to wait 10, 15, or 20 years under some new war minerals relief act before those who may have some unrecovered wartime investment at the end of hostilities should be compensated therefor. This was the case after the last World War.

Unfortunately, history is repeated. Now, nearly 5 years after the passage of the Contract Settlement Act, the record reveals that the miner has been treated with a disregard equal to, or perhaps greater than, that displayed following World War I. Why? Because the contracting agencies upon whom Congress placed the full responsibility for settling terminated war contracts, invoking certain differences between mining and manufacturing operations, necessarily reflected contractually, maintain that the standard mining contract offered by the contracting agencies during the war, and accepted without choice by the miner, is not covered by the language of the Contract Settlement Act. Since the effect of the aforementioned determination by the contracting agencies, upon whose shoulders Congress specifically placed the responsibility for the settlement of termination claims, has, in substance, the force of law, the producer of critical minerals and metals is forced to seek relief through an amendment to Public Law 395.

I have followed rather closely the attitude of the contracting agencies, particularly the RFC, in processing the claims which have been filed. It is clearly evident now that objectives specifically enumerated in the act are being completely nullified by legal technicalities, which cannot be dissolved short of an amendment.

I certainly am not going to engage in an argument involving the legal aspects of controversies relating to the interpretation of certain provisions of the Contract Settlement Act. It is enough for me to know that, when we prepared the act, we intended that the mining contractor, as any other war contractor, was to be paid for loss he might sustain from the withdrawal of markets, or because of representations made to him during the war period, and upon which he in good faith relied. The WPB was designated a contracting agency, due almost entirely to the program of stimulation which that agency devised and broadcast so that it might respond in terms of fair compensation.

Congress realized that controversies might arise as evidenced by the language of subsection (g) of section 6 which specifically provides that any contract which does not provide for, or provides against, such fair compensation shall be reformed or amended so that it does provide for such fair compensation.

In this bill, we do not disturb the main objectives of the Contract Settlement Act, but only attempt to clarify those legal technicalities which have arisen which seems to nullify the objective specifically enumerated in the act.

The proposed amendment serves, as simply as possible, to remove purely technical obstructions in the act itself, which for almost 5 years have prevented the payment of the fair compensation therein specified to producers of strategic or critical minerals and metals, who, because of the withdrawal of war-induced markets or other circumstances equally beyond their control, failed to recover the actual cost of mining operations entered into during the war period in good faith in response to repeated appeals from the President, Congress, and agencies of the Government, particularly the Metals Reserve Company and WPB. No clear, honest distinction can be drawn between our liability to that class of war contractors and those others to whom, under the authority of the provisions of Public Law 395—the Contract Settlement Act—we have already paid more that $7,000,000,000.

The amendment to the Contract Settlement Act consists of two parts:

Section 1 of the bill relates to formal contracts under section 6 of the Contract Settlement Act of 1944, and section 2 provides special treatment of this class of informal contracts under section 17 of the same act.

Section 1 is equipped with protective features selected from and modeled after certain devices employed in the Dent Act, the Lucas Act, and the Contract Settlement Act of 1944 itself. Subsection (h) confines recoveries to actual losses; (h) (1) requires the issuance of regulations within 60 days after enactment; (h) (2) provides that losses should be set off first against any net gains realized by the claimant on his other war contracts with the Government; (h) (3) rules out losses resulting from the negligence or poor management of the claimant, and losses resulting from purely speculative enterprises; (h) (4) requires claims to be filed within 1 year from enactment, and permits recovery of actual losses in excess of any previous settlements of the same claims under the First War Powers Act of 1941, or other provisions of the Contract Settlement Act.

Section 2, relating to informal contracts, contains language protecting the Government from unwarranted elements of recovery similar to those found in section 1, and adds a few additional safeguards designed to meet particular conditions. Subsection (e) (1), in effect, corrects the board of appeals' definition of "request to proceed" by enlarging it to include "any personal, written, or published request, demand, solicitation, or appeal—including a published, posted, or oral offer to purchase—from any contracting agency." It requires a good-faith expenditure of money, and confines recovery to net losses. Subsection (e) (2) authorizes the issuance of regulations within 60 days after enactment; (e) (3) repeats the provision of section 1 of the bill concerning restriction of recoverable losses to net losses from all war contracts with the Government; (e) (4) eliminates speculative losses and losses attributable to claimant's fault, negligence, or mismanagement; (e) (5) requires affirmative showing by claimant that he had reasonable cause to believe the property contained minerals in sufficient quantities to be of importance to the Government's procurement program at the time, and this relates itself to the time in question during the war and not to the present aspect of its importance; (e) (6) provides the priorities assistance from War Production Board, if not based solely upon claimant's uncorroborated representations, will constitute the sufficient reason mentioned in the preceding subsection (e) (5); (e) (7) requires claims to be filed within 1 year from enactment and permits recovery of net losses in excess of previous settlements for the same claims under the First War Powers Act of 1941, or other provisions of the Contract Settlement Act of 1944.

This amendment should be adopted because we owe these producers a debt, the real consideration for which stems from representations and warranties made to them during the war. Again I want to compliment the subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee, under the able leadership of the Honorable FRANCIS WALTER, which has so clearly and succinctly stated in their report the real purpose for which this bill is drawn. I specifically want to call your attention to the statement on page 3 of the report:

> We further are of the opinion that to deny relief to these claimants would imperil the position of the Government were another emergency to arise requiring immediate supplies of the critical minerals here involved. Niggardly treatment now of their claims would undoubtedly persuade them against reengaging in the same activity in the event they were called upon to do so. The potential loss to the Government in such case cannot be predicted, but any degree of shortage of such vital materials when needed could be disastrous to our welfare.

I am certain that you will agree that the situation which prompted these observations is becoming progressively more acute, and that more and more planners or our armament program have been rendered conscious of what might easily become a national calamity. The past year has witnessed an ever-increasing interest in the demand for the creation and maintenance of Government stock piles of these strategic materials. We must not place our dependency on foreign supply; in the future as never before, that source may be completely foreclosed.

These people should be paid fair compensation for past efforts; we will need their aid and assistance in the future.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the chairman of the subcommittee and the members of that committee for bringing this bill before the House. There are many small mine operators in my district who will be bankrupt except for the help they may get from this bill as a reward for their patriotic war efforts. I heartily approve of the bill. It is just and fair and I hope will be adopted without opposition.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further requests for time, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the Contract Settlement Act of 1944 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 3 (d), section 24, and section 25, of this act, any person who, in good faith entered into a formal contract to deliver, or to arrange to deliver, within specified periods of time, to a contracting agency or to a war contractor, specified quantities of a mineral or metal declared by the Army and Navy Munitions Board, during the emergency proclaimed by the President on September 8, 1939, to be strategic or critical, and in completing, or attempting to complete, his contract failed to recover his reasonable costs, including net capital expenditures, shall be paid fair compensation in an amount equal to the net loss so incurred: Provided, That—

"(1) the amount of reimbursement under this subsection shall be computed in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President within 60 days after enactment of this subsection based upon such recognized commercial accounting practices as are fair and equitable to the claimants hereunder;

"(2) in arriving at a fair and equitable settlement of claims under this subsection, the respective departments and agencies shall not allow any amount in excess of the amount of the net loss (less the amount of any relief granted subsequent to the establishment of such loss) on all contracts and subcontracts held by the claimant under which work, supplies, or services were furnished for the Government between September 8, 1939, and August 14, 1945, and shall consider with respect to such contracts and subcontracts (i) action taken under the Renegotiation Act (50 U. S. C., Supp. IV, app., sec. 1191), under the other provisions of this act, or similar legislation; (ii) relief granted under section 201 of the First War Powers Act, 1941, or otherwise; and (iii) relief proposed to be granted by any other department or agency under this act;

"(3) no compensation shall be paid under this subsection for expenditures attributable to the fault, negligence, or mismanagement of the claimant, or for expenditures made for merely speculative purposes;

"(4) claims for losses shall not be considered unless filed with the department or agency concerned within 1 year after the date of enactment of this subsection. A previous settlement under the First War Powers Act, 1941, or the Contract Settlement Act of 1944 shall not operate to preclude further relief otherwise allowable under this subsection."

SEC. 2. Section 17 of the Contract Settlement Act of 1944 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) (1) All claimants who, in response to any personal, written, or published request, demand, solicitation, or appeal (including a published, posted, or oral offer to purchase) from any contracting agency, in good faith expended money in producing or preparing to produce any minerals or metals declared by the Army and Navy Munitions Board during the emergency proclaimed by the President on September 8, 1939, to be strategic or critical, shall be paid by the contracting agency fair compensation for such net losses as they may have incurred.

"(2) The amount of reimbursement under this subsection shall be limited to amounts expended between September 16, 1940, and August 14, 1945, and shall be computed in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President within 60 days after enactment of this subsection based upon such recognized commercial accounting practices as are fair and equitable to the claimants hereunder.

"(3) In arriving at a fair and equitable settlement of claims under this subsection, the respective departments and agencies shall not allow any amount in excess of the amount of the net loss (less the amount of any relief granted subsequent to the establishment of such loss) on all claims, contracts, and subcontracts, if any, under which work, supplies, or services were furnished for the Government, or moneys were expended by the claimant, between September 8, 1939, and August 14, 1945, and shall consider with respect to such contracts and subcontracts (i) action taken under the Renegotiation Act (50 U. S. C., Supp IV, app., sec. 1191), under the other provisions of this act, or similar legislation; (ii) relief granted under section 201 of the First War Powers Act, 1941, or otherwise; and (iii) relief proposed to be granted by any other department or agency under this act.

"(4) No compensation shall be paid under this subsection for expenditures attributable to the fault, negligence, or mismanagement of the claimant, or for expenditures made for merely speculative purposes.

"(5) No compensation shall be paid under this subsection unless it shall affirmatively appear that the losses so incurred were incurred on property which the claimant had reasonable cause to believe contained strategic or critical minerals or metals in sufficient quantities to be of importance to the procurement program of the Government at the time.

"(6) Authorization by the War Production Board or any of its predecessor agencies for procurement of articles or materials to be used by the claimant in connection with the production of strategic or critical minerals or metals shall constitute sufficient reason for belief on the part of the claimant that the property contained strategic or critical minerals or metals in sufficient quantities to be of importance to the procurement program of the Government at the time, except where the authorization was based solely upon uncorroborated representations of the claimant.

"(7) Claims for losses shall not be considered unless filed with the department or agency concerned within 1 year after the date of approval of this subsection. A previous settlement under the First War Powers Act, 1941, or the Contract Settlement Act of 1944 shall not operate to preclude further relief otherwise allowable under this subsection."

Mr. WALTER (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill may be dispensed with and that the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD and open to amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming: Page 6, line 6, after line 6 insert a new subsection (8):

"Provided, That nothing in this act shall have any application to any claims now being litigated between Reconstruction Finance Corporation or any Government contracting agency upon the one side and any contractor on the other."

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is merely to provide a saving clause that will preclude any possibility whatsoever of the application of this bill as now written, to litigation now pending between the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or any Government agency and any contractor with such agency.

I am particularly concerned with a claim or dispute between the Monolith Portland Midwest Co. and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The facts are about as follows:

Shortly after the entry of the United States in World War II the aluminum-supply situation became critical.

As a result of the insecure position of the United States during the early part of the war in the aluminum field, four experimental plants were authorized by the War Production Board to test the feasibility of producing alumina from domestic sources of aluminum-bearing raw materials other than bauxite. Three of these plants had been completed and short trial runs made of the various processes. However, the fourth one, which is located at Laramie, Wyo., was only about 90 percent completed, with no trial operation thereof being made at the time the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in 1946, canceled the contract for its completion and operation.

The process developed by the Monolith Portland Midwest Co. uses anorthosite, from which the alumina is extracted and the remainder is a good Portland cement raw material. The deposits in Wyoming near the plant cover hundreds of thousands of acres and would provide a supply of alumina for the world's use for generations. It is believed that the Monolith plant and process at Laramie, Wyo., can economically use all of the raw materials entering therein for the production of alumina and portland cement.

Inasmuch as the United States has less than 5 percent of the known proven supply of bauxite in the world, it is believed to be sound policy to find a substitute for this strategic material.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation terminated its contract with Monolith on the ground that the experiment was no longer in the public interest. Monolith was forced to bring suit against the RFC in the Federal District Court of California. The court ordered that the status quo of the plant and assets remain unchanged until a determination could be made of the obligations of the RFC, and the plant therefore is intact in every respect and could be placed in operation in a short time.

It is Monolith's position that the provisions of the Contract Settlement Act are optional. That is to say, that an aggrieved contractor may take either course in the adjudication of his rights by either complying with the Contract Settlement Act regulations or bring action in any court of competent jurisdiction.

I have discussed this amendment with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] and with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] and with the author of the bill, the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLE], and I am certain there is no objection to this amendment which merely preserves the rights of a party in pending litigation.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. As I understand the gentleman's amendment, the purpose is to make it certain that no technical objections can be raised in the court in a case that is now in the court. The purpose of the amendment is to make it abundantly plain that it is the intention of Congress to give to those people the same equitable relief that anybody else may have under the provisions of the law.

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. That is right.

Mr. ENGLE of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
